

OVER THE WAY.

Over the way of your dreams, my boy,
Are wondrous things for your eyes to see,
And wonderful paths to a world of joy...

To greet you with tender and honest words,
And never a theme that you might regret.
Ahl! over the way of your dreams it lies—
This land of the Ought-to-Be, so fair;

THE FARMER'S LOT.

The farmer is a happy man—or should be,
Don't you know.
He doesn't have a thing to do but plow and reap...

He keeps a wagon and a span with which to drive to town;
His wife was never known to be without a gingham gown;

DURING THE NIGHT

A Harrowing Predicament.

By Neil Wynne Williams.

LIKE many an other man, I have an affinity for awkward predicaments, and to submit to what is popularly known as an "experience" is—if not exactly my daily lot in life—my very frequent fate.

There's an escape of gas. The house is full of it. Are you there? Do you hear? There's an escape of gas—!"

Down and down through the darkness, the ghost of light in a hall glances with here a stumble and there a stumble—to the basement, warm and odoriferous with kitchen odors tainted with gas.

When George King, the cowboy, started out to "round up" a herd of cattle that was pasturing in the valleys of the Santa Ana River he invited an Indian, Juan Machado, to accompany him and help him in the cattle driving.

"It was a November day—the time 9 o'clock in the evening. I was in a London street, and had just viewed to my satisfaction a bow window in which was hung up a card with "Apartments to Let" printed upon it.

Immediately the Indian appeared to be in a state of abject terror and refused to take the trip, assuring King that the grizzly bear always overheard such threats and that hunters who announced their object were sure to be eaten up.

"I was a November day—the time 9 o'clock in the evening. I was in a London street, and had just viewed to my satisfaction a bow window in which was hung up a card with "Apartments to Let" printed upon it.

"Anything wrong, sir?" and with the words came a broad flash of light which, settling momentarily on my face, dropped as quickly to my bare feet and back again.

It was dark, so dark that the curtained window of my room offered but the faintest suggestion of the fog-swathed light without.

"Yes; the house is full of gas, and—they've gone. I might have been suffocated; perhaps they wanted to suffocate me. I don't know—I—"

With a wave of my arm, I threw the bedclothes to one side, and with an eager leg placed a foot to the floor. Then I stood up and hesitated.

The man evidently did not know what interpretation to place upon either me or my story (and small wonder, I hardly knew myself), but, extinguishing his lantern, proposed that we research the house together.

Then thought lapsed into instinct, and action supervened. I crept quietly to the door and turning the key in its lock with the caution of a thief, and drawing the door into the blackness of my room, faced the blackness that vaster lay outside it.

One of the reasons why the French of Canada could never hope to maintain themselves in the contest for supremacy with the English and the residents of the thirteen colonies was that corn could be grown north of the lakes and the St. Lawrence in limited quantities only.

mon additional assistance. A shrill call on his whistle—from the hall door—translated the decision into action, and with the arrival of another constable upon the scene I was called upon for a fresh explanation.

To the right and back, and then to the left, went that constable. Rat-a-tat, rat-a-tat! went the knockers. Up went the windows, out came heads.

At the station, I told the inspector on duty all about myself quite like a little boy. But he did not appear satisfied, and muttered some word to himself that sounded to me like "suspectious," and which resulted in my seclusion.

THIS HORSE IS A JUMPER. Cleared a Chasm of Twenty-one Feet to Escape a Grizzly.

Not many horses trained in steeplechasing and ridden by skilled jockeys could make a clean jump of twenty-one feet.

When George King, the cowboy, started out to "round up" a herd of cattle that was pasturing in the valleys of the Santa Ana River he invited an Indian, Juan Machado, to accompany him and help him in the cattle driving.

Immediately the Indian appeared to be in a state of abject terror and refused to take the trip, assuring King that the grizzly bear always overheard such threats and that hunters who announced their object were sure to be eaten up.

A day or two afterward he was following a lonely trail alone. The trail led through a dense thicket and was near the border of a dangerous gulch. Suddenly the pathway made a sharp curve and disclosed to the cowboy's sight a monster grizzly gnawing at the quivering flesh of a newly killed yearling.

The little horse needed no spurs, but darted onward through the brush with incredible swiftness, the angry bear following close behind.
