A Hint To Gardeners.

I have had more than twenty years' experience in amateur gardening—mainly utilitarian—have moved about a good deal, and thus have cultivated many different gardens. All have been remarkable for their abundant crops, though I have never purchased a single load of manure, while my neighbours have carted in ton after ton, and have obtained smaller edible crops than mine. I do not even waste the ammonia and agricultural fuel of my weeds by burning them, but bury them whole, and with them the pea-stalks, bean-stalks, cabbage-stalks, &c., &c. Thus buried, they undergo during the winter slow combustion, warm the soil, and supply it with humus, at the same time giving up their ammoniacal salt to this humus and to the absorbent alumina of the clay, which supply it in the summer to the succeeding crops. These weeds, &c., with the addition of the vegetable refuse of a small household, and well-burned coal ashes (i.e., the mineral matter of fossil vegetation), I have found sufficient to maintain and increase the fertility of a kitchen garden, an orchard covering more than an acre. At the same time, I see the gardeners employed by my neighbours wheeling away barrow-loads of weeds to pitch them on waste ground, if any is at hand, and the dustmen carry away cartloads of vegetable treasures. Then, on the day following, or thereabouts, cartloads of expensive and offensive manure are brought to the same doors from which far better material was thrown away the day before. Stable manure and cattle stall manure are especially valuable for farm land, simply because they carry back to the hay-field and the oat-field precisely that which has been taken away. But the salts removed by garden weeds differ materially from those contained in hay and straw litter, or oats and horse beans, and thus the unsentient gardener who uses these requires at least half a ton to be as effective as one hundred-weight of the decayed produce of the garden itself.—Sci. Am. Journal.

Wanted—A Quiet Life.

A nervous-looking man went into a store the other day and sat down for half an hour or so, when the clerk asked if there were anything she could do for him. He said no, he didn't want anything. She went away, and he sat there half an hour longer, when the proprietor went to him and asked if he wanted to be shown anything. "No," said the nervous man, "I just wanted to sit around. My physician has recommended perfect quiet for me, and says above all things I must avoid being in crowds. Noticing that you did not advertise in the newspapers, I thought this would be as quiet a place as I could find, so I just dropped in for a few hours of complete isolation." The merchant picked up a bolt of paper cambric to brain him, but the man went out. He said all he wanted was a quiet life.—Scot. Am. Journal.
