VARIEGATED DOGS.

"I think a boy ought to do everything he can to make it pleasant for his pa, don't you? And yet some parents don't realize what a comfort a boy is. The blue dog was called in; and just as pa wiped the perspiration off his forehead and rubbed his eyes, and put on his specs, the red maroon dog came out. Pa acted as if he was tired and sat down on a horse-block. Dogs do make some people tired, don't they? He took hold of my hand, and his hand trembled just as though he was putting a gun-wad in the collection plate at church, and he said, 'My child, tell me truly, is that a red dog?' A fellow has got to lie a little if he is going to have any fun with his pa, and I told him it was a white dog, and I could get it for five dollars. He straightened up just as the dog went into the house, and said, 'Well, I'm dern'd'; and then the boy let all the dogs out and sicked them on to a cat, which ran up a shade tree, right near pa, and they rushed all round us, the blue dog going between his legs and the green dog trying to climb the tree, and the pink dog barking, and the red dog standing on his hind feet. Pa was as weak as a cat, and told me to go right home with him, and he would buy me a bicycle. He asked me how many dogs there were and what was the color of them. I s'pose I did awful wrong; but I told him there was only one dog and a cat, and the dog was white. Well, sir, pa acted just as he did the night Hancock was beat, and he had to have the doctor give him something to quiet him (the time he wanted me to go right down town and buy a hundred rat-traps, but the doctor said never mind, I needn't go.) I took him home, and ma soaked his feet, and gave him some ginger tea, and when I was gone after the doctor he asked ma if she ever saw a green dog. That was what made all the trouble. If ma had kept her mouth shut I would have been all right, but she up and told him they had a green dog and a blue dog, and all colors of spitz dogs down at the Dyers. They dyed them just for an advertisement, and for him to be quiet, and he would feel better when he got over it. Pa was all right when I got back and told him the doctor had gone to Wauwatoa, and I had left an order on his slate. Pa said he would leave an order on my slate. He took a harness-tug, and used it for breeching on me. I don't think a boy's pe ought to wear out harness on his son, do you? He said he would learn me to play rainbow dogs on him. He said I was a liar and he expected to see me wind up in Congress. Say, is Congress anything like Waupun, or Sing Sing? No, I can't stay, thank you, I must go down to the office and tell pa I've reformed and freeze him out of a circus ticket. He is a good enough man, only he don't appreciate a boy that has got all the modern improvements. Pa and ma are going to enter me in the Sunday-school. I guess I'll take first money, don't you?"

And the bad boy went out with a visible limp and a look of genius cramped for want of opportunity.—
