ried into execution before the twelve Judges meet, I will bring this outrageous case before them."

This had the effect intended. Judge Torrens invited O'Connell to continue the defense of his clients, and to this, after some pretended reluctance, O'Connell assented. The case went on, and the Judge, to show he was no bigot, put the character for honesty given the prisoners by the priest so strongly that the jury almost instantly brought in their verdict, not guilty.
