That Chinese Secret Society on Beretania Street had another grand procession this morning. It formed at their Hall and consisted of about thirty or forty Chinese and Kanaka boys, carrying flags, weapons and other un-nameable things, after which came a large sedan-like chair covered with red cloth, made to contain the joss, and carried by six men. The rear of this imposing procession was brought up by the orchestra in an express. Arriving at the Chinese Theatre where the joss had been temporarily placed since Monday, a short ceremony took place, and then Joss was taken down, placed comfortably in the sedan chair and taken back to his final resting place in the new Hall.

Penuew, an insane person, was committed to the Insane Asylum, until released by proper authority.

The man who considers that the home-duties of a woman are inferior to the political work of man must be either a bachelor or blind. The very highest qualities of the heart and intellect may be exercised by a mother, a sister, or an elder daughter, in watching over the physical, mental, and moral growth of the children in her care. Heroic patience, a vigilance that never tires, an adaptation of means to the end, a careful study of individual traits, a keen psychological insight, may find ample room for exercise within the four walls even a humble home.

There is at the present day a strong tendency to undervalue the past, and to sever our connection with it. With all our words of adulation, we seldom give our heart's reverence to the thoughts and lives of the good and great that have passed from among us. While we perpetuate their names and merits in print or in marble, we forget to perpetuate their best results in thought or in work by loyally carrying it on to a still higher plane. To accept heartily and thankfully all the treasures of love, of wisdom, and of labour that our friends have bequeathed to us, and to build upon them the best structures we are capable of creating—this is the best way of truly honouring and cherishing their memory.

Interest in our work for its own sake is a cultivatable quality. We all possess it in some degree, and we may all increase it if we will. Children may be accustomed at a very early age to take pleasure in the success of their own efforts, quite apart from any personal good they may derive from it. The careful observe of child-nature will notice that this is a natural delight, and is deadened and diminished only by the growth of selfish considerations. If care is taken to make work as congenial as possible, to prevent its being excessive and exhausting, and to sympathize with and encourage the natural joy of success, there is no reason why it should ever decrease. The youth who enters upon a well-chosen life-employment with this power of happiness and also with the power of self-government has every reason to hope that his work may be successful and his life valuable and happy.

It is the part of an indiscreet and troublesome ambition to care too much about fame, about what the world says of us; to be always looking into the faces of others for approval; to be always anxious for the effect of what we do and say; to be always shouting to hear the echo of our own voices. If you look about you, you will see men who are wearing life away in feverish anxiety of fame, and the last we shall ever hear of them will be the funeral-bell that tolls them to their early graves.

We should not forget that a prejudiced mind may be an honest one—indeed prejudiced people are generally sincere and earnest. Their chief fault is a sort of mental blindness or distorted vision; and this is rather a disease than a sin, and they are far more likely to be cured of it by gentle persuasive measures, or by simple tacit toleration, than by violent or aggressive argument.

Good health is catching, and all are benefited by contact with healthy people. Ill-health is also catching, and the most healthy person is depressed by long contact with the sick.

Situation Wanted.
