THE LONDON EXPLOSIONS.

There were three explosions in London on the 24th of January, briefly referred to in our last issue. The first occurred in the crypt of Westminster Hall shortly after two o'clock in the afternoon, the second in the Strangers' Gallery of the House of Commons a few minutes later, and the third almost at the same moment in the building known as the White Tower. It is considered fortunate that the explosion in the Hall happened before that in the House, as the noise of the first drew many visitors out of the Commons chamber in time to save their lives. A lady visitor noticed a smoking package on the steps outside the crypt and drew a policeman's attention to it. He picked it up and was running to throw it out of the building, when he let it fall and it immediately exploded with terrific force. That policeman and another were fatally hurt, and two other persons badly injured. Remarkable force was shown by this explosion in a downward direction. Holes were scooped in the ground large enough to hold a man. Into one of the holes so formed Constable Cox was violently thrown and from it was extricated in a bruised and battered condition. The foundation of the Hall was uninjured, but the roof was badly damaged. The magnificent stained glass window over the main doorway was damaged, but not beyond repair. The statues of William IV. and George IV. were overturned and greatly injured. Some of the windows were blown bodily away, while others were riddled as with shot. The roof of the crypt, in spite of its massive strength, was greatly damaged, rifts being visible here and there.

In the House of Commons the damage done was immense, and will take months to repair. Temporary repairs will be made against the assembling of Parliament on Feb. 19th. Apparently the explosive was placed under the Peers gallery, on the Government side of the house. All the woodwork in that part of the building was shattered and a wide hole made through the floor. The gallery was displaced, and even the solid stonework of the doorways was either pulverized or shifted from its position; every pane of glass in the house was smashed to atoms, and the gallery benches overturned and broken. The gallery was generally dismantled. A heavy beam, which formed one of the supports of the gallery, was projected into the Speaker's chair, seriously injuring it. Gladstone's seat was torn to pieces. Three-fourths of the glass roof had been removed previous to the explosion, but what was left was shattered. The explosion wrenched off the Irish harp which forms part of the ornamental work on the panels of the Parliament house, and the harp dropped into the seat of a Parnellite member. Mr. Forster's seat was ripped up. Of the golden letters "V. R." on the desk opposite Gladstone's seat, the "V" was torn away. Fortunately the downward force of the dynamite failed to reach the gas meter of the House of Commons, which is directly below the ventilating chamber.

About sixty visitors were in the Tower at the time of the explosion there. The explosive agent was placed behind a rack of rifles in the banqueting hall of the White Tower. It played its maddest freaks with the rifles. Many of them were twisted in the most eccentric shapes imaginable and their distorted forms scattered about the apartment in a marvel of confusion. All the glass and other fragile articles in the hall were smashed out of all semblance of their former selves. A large hole was crushed through the floor at the spot where the dynamite was placed. Directly overhead a similar hole was blown through the roof. The concussion displaced the great stone which lay over the tomb of the nephews of Richard III. and exposed the coffins in which their dust reposes almost in sight of the spot where their eyes were so cruelly put out and their young lives smothered.

Tremendous crowds were attracted by the explosions, and their indignation became furious at the sight of the bleeding heads, faces and limbs of the children who formed a large portion of the injured visitors to the buildings. Several persons were arrested, but all, with the exception of an Irishman of several names, were released for want of evidence. Women are supposed to have had a hand in the outrage.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Some apology for a human being is in the habit of mutilating the copy of this paper displayed at the office door. He may find it cheaper one of these days to pay a nickel for a whole paper than to cut articles out of this copy that is stuck up for the benefit of the poor.

The mynahs seem to have earned as much opprobrium here as the English sparrows have in New England and Canadian cities. Indeed, one of the few merits grudgingly allowed them here is that they keep the pugnacious and rapacious sparrow in check. We should vote for converting both the unmusical birds into pie and stew, and getting in their places varieties of song birds that would be equally useful in eradicating the grub, bug and insect pests of vegetation.

The Paris correspondent of the London Spectator shows by figures a tremendous difference in mortality between the bachelor and benedict classes, during the prevalence of cholera in that city in November last. He also shows that mortality was much lower among married than single females, and concludes that "women manage to keep themselves alive and their husbands too." This conveys a solemn hint to Honolulu bachelors in view of a possible visitation of cholera this year.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

Stanford has been elected Senator in California and Everts in New York.
The steamer San Pablo, from San Francisco for Yokohama and Hongkong, is 55 days out. She had five white passengers.
Terrible fatality is reported from Panama. The Director-General of the Canal has lost his entire family by yellow fever, and himself is the survivor of a party of twelve persons who arrived at the Isthmus fifteen months ago.
A recommendation made by the House Military Committee, Washington, that Lieutenant Greely be appointed Assistant Chief Signal Officer, has been withdrawn. Officials give as the reason that it was undesirable to make new legislation of that kind, but other people believe charges have been preferred against Greely, holding him accountable for cannibalism in the Arctic.
A financial crisis has been averted by the New York banks, after conference with the Government, consenting to take silver certificates instead of coin from the National Government.

The recent dynamite outrages are likely to cause an extension of the English detective service. Distress has been caused the poor Irish in England from hundreds being discharged from employment since the explosions. In some places inoffensive Irish people have been maltreated in reprisal for the deeds of their countrymen.

England and France have come to an understanding about the financial management of Egypt, and it is said in Paris that England will withdraw her troops from the Soudan as soon as possible.

Garry Brothers' dry good store, New York, was damaged to the extent of $2500 at a late hour on the night of March 31st, by an explosion of dynamite, which was placed underneath the framework of a window. The Equality Association is blamed for the outrage, but its members deny all knowledge of it.
