WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT.

Confronting the hundreds of persons who strolled yesterday through the burnt district was a large poster stuck on telephone posts—what was left of them—and other conspicuous positions, announcing the permanent repairing or the re-erection of wooden buildings in the burnt district to be strictly prohibited, and also that no buildings except those of stone, brick, iron or other fire-proof material will be permitted; further, that surveys are in progress, the results of which will be published as soon as practicable. The document is signed by the Minister of the Interior. Twelve feet from one of the notices referred to, and in full view of it, the first new fabric, after the fire, was in an advanced stage of construction, the square frame being up and one side board in. This will, of course, produce a collision between the proprietor of the new structure, which is not a large one, being only 12 by 16 feet or thereabout, and the Government. The question of the jurisdiction of the Minister of the Interior will probably require a decision of the Supreme Court to settle. Should it be decided that the Minister has power to prevent private property owners from building what they please, when they please, and how they please, on their own lots, the result will involve considerable hardship to many who are naturally anxious to get back under their own roofs as soon as possible. But on the other hand, providing the Minister's proclamation is ruled ultra vires, or illegal, the inevitable result will be the speedy re-erection of a conglomeration of shanties of a more heterogeneous class than those wiped off the page of Hawaiian architecture on Sunday evening. Not only will the gingerbread architecture of Maunakea, Meek and King streets spring, Sphinx-like, from its ashes, but the probabilities are that buildings which might have been tolerable, had it not been for their surroundings, will be quite conspicuous for their absence, as no owner of a building of any pretensions will think of re-building in the middle of a new forest of firetraps. The costly lesson of the 20th may then, of course, be set down as necessary for rehearsal at some future day.

The opportunity has come, and, though it has come unsought, it is none the less indispensable that it be improved. The substitution of a respectable city with ample thoroughfares and decent streets for miserable tunnels and alleyways is the plain duty of the day, and nothing but stupidity and wretched narrow-mindedness will ignore its claims. That the Chinese have been permitted in the past to crowd together, as the event has proved, for their own ruin, renders it all the more imperative upon the public to prevent their doing so again. All persons who are unable to see beyond the limit of their own present and petty personal interests will doubtless be ready to offer every possible resistance to the interposition of either the Government or their fellow-citizens on behalf of the permanent stability and safety of Honolulu, the only mid-ocean city of the Western Hemisphere. It was always a source of gratification to residents who had any respect for themselves or their surroundings, that the wretched jumbles of architecture which are now represented by blackened ruins, were outside of the usual lines of observation of transient visitors. Passengers in transit between America and the Australasian colonies were usually conducted to and from the Hotel, through Fort street, and when conducted "through the city," were shown the royal palace, Aliiolani Hale, the Opera House, the Library and Y. M. C. A. buildings, and perchance Waikiki and the Pali; but who ever thought of conducting a visitor through King or Maunakea streets? Thousands of such flying visitors have thus left these shores carrying with them impressions of a fine mid-ocean city with buildings of approved modern pattern.

One of the most painful duties of fair journalism, in present circumstances, is that of discovering to readers abroad the unsavory fact that sixty acres of pestilential slums were cleaned up within the city limits; for the execution of a sanitary purgation of such vast dimensions will be a less startling piece of news to many than that the conditions requiring it actually prevailed. The only creditable sequel to the narrative of last Sunday afternoon's doings, that can be presented to the world abroad, is the announcement that a new era in the sanitary and architectural history of Honolulu has been inaugurated.

The proclamation of the Minister of the Interior, whether legal or not, certainly expresses the sentiments of every resident in sympathy with the progress and stability of the city at home and the certainty of a well-merited reputation abroad. And provided the laws are not sufficient to meet the case, it is fortunate that the Legislative Assembly will shortly be in session; and if that body possesses a moiety of the calibre supposed to be an inherent quality of law-making minds, enactments bearing upon this matter may very speedily be framed. As to the relations existing between the functions of Government and the rights of private property, it is an admitted principle of law in other countries that no citizen may be deprived of his property or of any part of it without a just equivalent; and in the case of railroad building and other works for the use of the public, lands are taken and buildings removed, the proprietors being compensated on carefully appraised valuations; and the same principle is recognized in the courts here. Or if it be necessary to the re-building of the burnt district on more solid architectural basis and under reformed sanitary conditions, for the Government to take possession of the whole area by purchase from the proprietors and lease holders, there is no doubt that the appropriation of a liberal sum from the public funds for the purpose would be a welcome measure. And it is the manifest duty of the public to support the Government in carrying to a successful issue any reasonable measure that may be adopted to meet the emergency. Every sentiment of partisan feeling should be suppressed. If the debris of a half annihilated city is not sufficient to stir up public opinion to a due appreciation of the greatness of the interests involved, and to fix a determination to forego all minor considerations, then there is little prospect that the future will be any improvement on the past. Union is strength, and union has great possibilities within its reach at the present time. Whether the opportunity forced upon the attention of the people of Honolulu by the alarm of Sunday afternoon is to be won or lost, remains to be written either in congratulations over a renovated city or in vain regrets over a resuscitated town of shanties.
