STRAWBERRIES AS HEALTH FOOD.

There are so many excellent things which cannot be enjoyed without injuries after effects, that one is glad to hear one good authority that strawberries in moderate or even in immoderate quantities are good for the health. Fontenelle, who lived so long that, according to his own grim joke, the powers above appeared to have forgotten him, attributed his longevity, in some measure at least, to the effect of strawberries upon his digestion.

When he was dying, his friend, Count de la Place, called to see how he was going on. "Not going on at all," said Fontenelle, "going off." He added, however, that "if he could catch the strawberries, he believed that he should live another year." Before the strawberries came in, however, he was dead.—[St. James Budget.

INSECT SUFFERING.

Mr. Moggridge, in his studies in natural history had been in the habit of immersing, for preservation, his different specimens of spiders and ants in bottles of alcohol. He saw that they struggled for a few minutes; but he thought that sensation was soon extinguished and that they were soon free from suffering. On one occasion he wished to preserve a large female spider and twenty-four of her young ones, that he had captured. He put the mother into a bottle of alcohol, and saw that after a few moments she folded up her legs upon her body, and was at rest. He then put into the bottle the young ones, who, of course manifested acute pain. What was his surprise to see the mother arouse herself from her lethargy, dart around and gather her young ones to her bosom, fold her legs over them, again relapse into insensibility, until at last death came to her relief, and the limbs, no longer controlled by this material instinct, released their grasp! The effect of the exhibition of love is a lesson to our common humanity.

WASP STINGS AND ONION JUICE.

A correspondent writes to the London Times: No doubt F. R. C. S. is right in saying that it is not the wasp's poison that kills, but the fainting, which F. R. C. S. takes for granted is induced by terror, which may be the case sometimes, but certainly not always. When my son was about fifteen he went out one evening with the men to take a wasp's nest. Soon he rushed into the drawing-room, looking like death, saying he could hardly get up to the house. He had been stung in the eye-ball. There was a great commotion, and of course salavatole was got; but one of the maids urged me so pertinaciously to put in onion juice that I said, "Get some, quick, and put it in." This she did, before he became insensible. The effect was marvelous. His color began to return, and before long he jumped up to go and finish taking the nest. In this case there was no fear whatever. No year passes without his taking wasps' and hornets' nests, although every spring I offer rewards for every wasp and hornet brought to me. I have known other cases of faintness and violent sickness from a wasp's sting where there was no fear; but I strongly recommend the onion as always to be had. Cut a fresh one, scrape the juice and put it on the sting. It is not often a wasp leaves its sting, but it is easily seen. Bees always leave their stings, so can be defended or offend once, which is to me one of the mysteries of nature.

FRIGHTENED TO DEATH.

Few people seem to properly estimate the great wrong of frightening children. Nearly every household has its "ugly old man," or its "great old bear." The terrible old man and this great old bear are powerful terrors in nursery discipline. "Come along here, now," a mother or nurse will say to a child, "and let me put you to bed." "I don't want to go to bed now," the child replies. "You'd better come on here now, or I'll tell that ugly old man to come and take you away. There he comes now." This has the intended effect, and the child, trembling in fear, submits at once and goes to bed, probably to see in imagination all kinds of horrible faces.

The sad death of a little girl which occurred recently, shows what a strong impression these "hoogers" make on the minds of children. The little one was a beautiful child, and everyone at the fashionable boarding-house where her parents were spending the summer months loved her with that purity of affection which a child so gently, yet so strongly, inspires. She would stand at the gate and clap her little hands with glee when her father came to dinner, and when he would take her on his shoulder she would shout and call to everyone to look how high she was. One day a large shaggy dog came into the yard, and when she ran to him and held a flower to his nose, he growled and turned away. She was terribly frightened, and the black nurse, who stood near, was not slow in making a mental note of the impression the dog had made. Several nights afterward, when bed-time came, the child was unusually wakeful.

"Yer'd better come heah an' git in dis bed," the nurse commanded. "I don't want to."

"All right, den. I see gwing out an' call dat ole dog what growled at yer. When he comes an' fin's you outten de bed he'll bite yer head off."

The little girl grew deadly pale.

"Nuthin' would suit that dog better de to git a chance at yer. 'Tother night he cotch a little girl across de road an' eat her all up."

The child screamed.

"Come on heah, an' I won't let him ketch yer."

The poor little thing obeyed. Her father and mother were at an entertainment, and there was no appeal from the negro woman's decision. When morning came the little girl did not awake with her glad "good mornin', papa and mamma."

She had tossed all night and a hot fever had settled upon her. She grew rapidly worse, and the next day the physician declared that there was no hope for her. She became delirious, and, struggling, would say:

"Dog shan't have mamma's little girl!"

It was a sorrowing circle that surrounded her death-bed. The parents were plunged into a grief which none but the hearts of fathers and mothers can feel.

Her last moments were a series of struggles. How hard the beautiful can die. She wildly threw up her little hands and shrieked:

"Go away, dog!"

A gentle hand wiped the death froth from her lips.

Again she struggled and shrieked: "Dog shan't have mamma's little girl!" but she died ere the sentence was finished.—[Boston Herald.

Great Excitement in Wales

about a Marvellous Cure.

Living Six Years Without Going to Bed.

Mr. EORRIS.—While spending a few days at the pleasant seaside town of Aberystwyth, Cardiganshire, Wales, I heard related what seemed to me either a fabulous story or a marvellous cure.

The story was that a poor sufferer who had not been able to lie down in bed for six long years, given up to die by all the Doctors, had been speedily cured by some Patent Medicine. It was related with the more implicit confidence from the circumstance, as was said, that the Vicar of Llanystrid was familiar with the facts, and could vouch for the truth of the report.

Having a little curiosity to know how such stories grow in
