ABOUT BOYS AND HOODLUMS.

All men were boys once. And, generally speaking, the more real the boy as a boy, the more genuine the man as a man, when the boy becomes a man. Not always, for sometimes a real boy, with a heart as true as steel and as big as a bullock's, develops into a mean, deceitful, selfish something in the likeness of man, with a soul shriveled up to dollars and cents.

We like boys. They are so jubilant, so happy, so candid, so guileless, that we look upon them with admiration, delight, and affection. Moreover, we believe them to be a much maligned class of the community, and accused of being troublesome, mischievous, and restless, which indeed they are, or they would not be boys. But these are parts of true boyish nature, and not sins. To regard patched pants as signs of honor, and high hats as objects of detestation, and to possess simple hearts into which the lessons of fashion and gentility have yet to be instilled, do not involve a breach of the decalogue.

Be it understood that the word boy is used in a limited sense, and with sorrow we confess that boys are scarce now-a-days—at least, among the young people of our acquaintance. Our lot is cast in an age when the youth of the masculine gender speedily scorn the chrysalis state of boyhood, and soar forth as young gentlemen with kid gloves, and canes, and sham jewelry, smoke cigarettes, drink beer and spirits, blaspheme, and do all they can to create the impression that they are small men. These are not boys at all in our vocabulary. They are an entirely different class of animal. They are hoble-de-hoys. And with all our admiration for boys, we have unmitigated contempt for these young swells.

Yes, it must be confessed that Honolulu is a place where a terrible disease corrupts the healthy happiness of boyhood at a very early age, and an alarmingly large proportion of cases break out into all the unhealthy bloom of dandyism and hoodlumism. They get themselves up gorgeously, decorate their fronts with vulgar looking chains and their fingers with massive rings, carry walking canes, perch their hats on three hairs, play billiards, loll around street corners, make painful efforts to smoke cigarettes and cigars, and use foul language. In the matter of wisdom, Solomon was a fool in comparison with these young gentlemen. They know everything; they don't require to be taught; they have no faith in those who are older and more experienced; they believe in themselves—a most heathenish belief. To tell them that to be manly is to be brave, and sensible, and honorable, and modest, and unselfish, is talking to the wind, for their measure of manliness lies in fashionable display, loud talk, and attempts at dissipation.

It is very sad to see so many of the rising generation transformed into caricatures of men, the healthy, honest nature of the boy polluted by bumpiness, silliness, foppishness, and vulgarity. No doubt, much of the evil is due to the fault of those who have their training. The worst effects are generally remediable, if the symptoms be observed and wisely treated in time. Two or three feet of cane, applied externally and the dose repeated if necessary, will be found in most cases to be wonderfully efficacious.

SCENE ON THE DEPARTURE OF A STEAMER.

The departure of a homeward-bound steamer from this, our adopted home, attracts at all times, a large gathering on the wharf of all classes of Society. Though the event happens two or three times every month, it is always varied, but nevertheless always interesting to someone. Some wend their way thither out of sheer curiosity, to kill time, to listen to the band, (which, by the way, was conspicuous by its absence yesterday) while some are bent on business, and a few to say "good-bye" to those who are nearest and dearest to them. To some it is a gay scene, to others a sad parting. To attempt to picture the true scene with the pen, of the young wife and the young husband who are about to be divided by the wide ocean, is more than the writer aspires to. He has so often witnessed the scene that it would be natural to infer that he would become callous to the falling tear and the last embrace, as the gangway is about to be withdrawn. The wavings of handkerchiefs follow, until at last, distance renders the dear one's form undistinguishable from others in the motley crowd. Meditation ensues, as the steamer is lost to sight, and even stern manhood is made to weep internally, if not visibly, as he wends his way citywards, alone and for the time deserted. The thoughts of those who have just said "Good-bye," can be well rendered in the melancholy words of the poet:—

"No one to love, no one to bless,
No one to cherish, or to caress."

Another and more enlivening part of the scene is the departure of the young gentleman who has just paid a flying visit to the Islands. He has been dined, and wined, and lionized on all sides. Dinners have been given in his honor, toasts drunk, and witty impromptu after-dinner speeches have been made to render the guest of the evening happy. The young ladies being non-members of the Bohemian club, are by reason thereof excluded from sharing in the festive gatherings of the "Owls in the Tropics," but they make up for it by having an impromptu dance. It is there they shine, and it is there that the society of a true gentleman is appreciated. But at last comes the day of departure. The handsome young man arrives at the wharf bedecked with leis, and blessed with Alohas. Jokes are indulged in by his Bohemian friends, while the young ladies, having only in mind the mazy waltz and the dizzy whirl of the ball-room, wave their handkerchiefs and smile. Their feelings might be depicted in the following words—a quotation from the "Two Cousins."

"I could wait day and night
In one whirl of delight
If partners were like that last one of mine."

Of such is the character of the scenes on the departure of a steamer for the Coast, the closing scene of which is a final "Adieu" as the noble specimen of naval architecture glides out of view over the placid waters, as a thing of life.

WHAT THE PUBLIC ARE PRAYING FOR.

That the garbage about town may be cleared away by some one before Xmas day;
That the opium license will never be granted;
That no more liquor licenses may be issued;
That the holes in the Pali road may be filled in before the next Jubilee;
That there may be no more forgers pardoned, and allowed to renew their dangerous practices in this or any other countries;
That the names of pardoned prisoners be published "By Authority" or otherwise;
That policemen be provided with easy chairs for the night watch, and umbrellas for the day watch;
That Xmas day be kept as a Holy day;
That Municipal Council be appointed to do those things that ought to be done, and which are at present left undone;
That barbers would sharpen their razors before a customer comes in, and not after.

DEPARTURE OF THE OCEANIC CO.'S STEAMER ALAMEDA.

The S. S. Alameda sailed last evening, bound to San Francisco. She carried away a large number of passengers as enumerated in our shipping columns. Also 1,249 bunches of bananas and 800 bags of rice. She took to San Francisco 6,510 letters, and 2,120 papers. She also nearly carried off half a dozen Hawaiian stevedores. These men had been engaged stowing away bananas and other freight in the ship's hold up to the last moment. When called on deck they found the vessel moving seawards, and their only hope and chance of regaining a footing on terra firma of HAWAII was by means of a rope attached to the after end of the vessel and the wharf. Professional acrobats could not have displayed more agility, than did the sturdy and active Hawaiians as they lowered themselves hand-over-hand fashion on a small line. One by one they came down the line like rats, that amuse themselves by scampering up and down a vessel's rigging. The scene was amusing to the spectators and exciting to the performers, each and all of whom were applauded for their activity. A large lamp belonging to these stevedores, was carried away, but probably returned in the pilot boat.

CONUNDRUMS.

The appended questions, which the author is pleased to denominate conundrums, have been handed to us, accompanied by an earnest request for their publication. The request is complied with, that the authorities may see that there is an insane person at large, and it is respectfully suggested that they keep a careful watch:—

If Chun Hook should capture himself would he get the $300?

Because a man is sleight of hand, is that a reason why he should slight a friend?

If a girl repeatedly says, "Oh, I'm so tired," must a fellow hold her in his arms?

If the Genealogy Board should turn loose their pigs, would they scent out the Chun Hook fair?

If Hopkins should shoot the wrong Chinaman, would it make him a hero?

If nuts assist digestion, what assists nuts?

If the BULLETIN and Advertiser poets should bump heads, would it enlarge their poetic functions?

If a fellow soars on the wings of verbosity and egotism, is he qualified for a dry goods' clerk?

If a fellow looks two ways for Sunday, how does he look Sunday morning?

If a lady continually beats her hired horse and the owner beats her, which is the bigger boet?

If a matrimonial market was opened here and bachelors sold under the hammer would it not be a harvest for the girls?

If the military force of the kingdom should assemble in the center of Oahu and gradually spread out, would they run Chun Hook into the sea, or would the fierce aspect of a moustache kill him right out?

What are the odds on the fight between the P. C. A. and the Herald, on the subsidy question? [Major Heep Savey offers 6 to 4 on the P. C. A.]

PIONEER STEAM CANDY FACTORY.

Of the cakes especial mention must be made of a Wedding Cake the artistic work of Mr. Horn. He challenges the kingdom to produce a man that can equal his handiwork in cake ornamentation, and will back his opinion to the amount of $500. It is a sight worth seeing and every lady and gentleman ought to pay a visit to the Pioneer Candy Factory. Mince pies have been made a specialty and will be ready for delivery to the million next Thursday. The ice cream parlors are also a feature in this extensive establishment.

COLONEL NORRIS BACK AGAIN.

Colonel Sam Migratory Norris arrived in Honolulu, by the barkentine Eureka, this morning. The Colonel is said to have dropped his dolphin line on leaving San Francisco, and not to have hauled it in until this morning. He did not catch a fish. In fact, did not get a bite. The Colonel is looking well and as young as ever. He is full of funny stories and as fresh as salmon. He travels between San Francisco and Honolulu merely to catch fish. The vessel he sails in, generally makes a long passage, and the Colonel is said to be a Jonah.

KOOLAU NOTES.

The fair weather of the week at Koolau was broken yesterday by rain-squalls, from the northward. Mr. C. M. Cook, well borer, while boring a well at Kabuku, struck wood 100 feet below surface. The kind or nature of the wood is not known.

One of the old artesian wells at Laie, Koolau, emitted two live fishes and a piece of lava, one day this week. The fish are named Ho-pain, or something similar in sound. Laie mill has commenced grinding. The yield this year is expected to be about 200 tons.

Last Wednesday the schooner Waiehu, with 800 bags of paddy aboard, glided over the reef near the Mokoli'i passage, without striking—a remarkable escape.

My answer to the question, how I was educated, ends where it began; I had the right mother.—President Timothy Dwight of Yale.
