GONE AT LAST.

After a series of delays and post-ponements, arising from various causes, not least amongst which were continued insobriety and insubordination, the Hawaiian war ship Kaimiloa, Captain G. E. G.
Jackson, has sailed at last. Anchor was weighed about half past eight o'clock this morning, and the vessel steamed slowly out of the harbor, there being at the time, several hundred spectators on the wharves to witness her departure.

The events immediately preceding the sailing of the Kaimiloa were of such a character as to cause a certain amount of apprehension as to what will follow, when she gets fairly on the high seas. From what has taken place, it is only natural to infer that there was a lack of discipline on board of the Kaimiloa, and judging from the crowd that has gone away in her, there is ground to fear that riot will run high ere she returns to these shores.
The reading of regulations and admiralty instructions, and the swearing in of the officers and the crew do not appear to have prevented sailors, marines or officers from disobeying orders, and assuming in turn a sort of individual command.
Such conduct on board of a man-of-war of any other nation but Hawaii would have been dealt with by a court martial, but as the component parts of such a court do not exist, unless it were formed of a scrub lot from the army, similar to the officers of the ship, of course no such proceeding was resorted to.

These circumstances combined with the nature of the mission can scarcely fail to bring the vessel, her crew, and the Government who despatched her, into ridicule, if not disgrace and possibly trouble.

WASH YOUR DIRTY LINEN AT HOME.

is advice which is sometimes tendered us unaccompanied by a bill of charges. Very kind of these good, unselfish people. Their disinterested generosity is exceeded only by their efforts to keep all the dirty linen concealed under the bed until everybody in the house is poisoned with the stench. Not a lawyer in the town would give professional advice on the same terms. Doctors charge a fee for their instructions.
Even clergymen, the very embodiment of benevolence, cannot afford to impart enlightenment for nothing, and you are supposed to drop something into the plate, if only a steel button, when it passes around.

Newspaper editors give about as much unasked advice, and undesired advice, too, as any class of men. But their hearts are not so big as to work altogether on the cheap. Five cents a copy is the usual fee, with a slight reduction for a large number, or fifty cents a month to regular subscribers.
Naturally, men who are in the habit of getting a fee for advice, can appreciate the extreme goodness of heart which tenders them "advice gratis."

It is very kind of people to take any thought of our linen whatever, and the implied wish that it should be washed and cleansed is commendable in the highest degree; for clean linen is very essential to health and comfort, especially in a climate that is usually moderately warm. Although, by the way, our experience of the world is that people are generally more concerned about the condition of their outer fittings, which are usually of some other material, than of their inner apparel, denominated linen. Thus, a man with a stylish pair of pantaloons and a superb coat often has, concealed underneath, dilapidated linen not scrupulously clean. He would not appear on the streets in a threadbare coat, though without a speck of dirt, for the world, but he may have a shirt full of holes and seasoned with a week's accumulation of dirt, without feeling a particle of concern.

We presume the primary cause of this individual peculiarity of many people may be found in the eccentricities of mankind in general. It is not clean linen, nor respectability of character, nor uprightness of life, nor intellect which is respectfully and reverentially saluted, but a fine suit of glossy clothes, polished boots, a large gold chain, and a bell-topper hat. These make the man, whether they are paid for or not, got honestly or stolen, and the flesh-and-bones figure which is decorated with them will be duly bowed to and politely saluted; while the man of honor who is incapable of a mean act, and wears a patched coat and a billy-cock hat, both of which he has paid for, and can be induced to put on nothing better until he feels able to afford it, will only be seen to be avoided and given a wide berth by the swells.
Such is the way of the world, from which it is evident the world is vastly more matter than mind, and that neither clean linen nor the truly noble attributes of heart and head are of any weighty consequence in the public estimation.

After the foregoing detour, we come back to the gratuitous advice, the receipt of which was acknowledged at the start, and proceed to reply as briefly as possible. Our kind advisers apparently recognise the fact that there is dirty linen which needs washing. On this point there is perfect agreement between them and ourselves. We have long been conscious of the fact that this small nation has a big pile of social, moral, political, and official dirty linen, piled away in various places.
The bulk has been steadily increasing, until it has become so large that every man not born blind cannot help seeing it. The persons responsible for the soiling, seem to care nothing about the cleansing. In fact, they appear to have lost all sense of shame. It has been our custom to inform them gently and gingerly of its existence, with the hope of inducing them to attend to the washing and to adopt more cleanly habits, and only, as a rule, when they deliberately and insolently ignore their duty and responsibility, do we tell them in plain English that they are a dirty set of scall-wags—not, we confess, because we deem the guilty parties entitled to consideration, but because we know that our feeble words, although coming from an obscure source and a rusty old pen, are scattered to the five continents of the globe by every outgoing mail, and we are ashamed for the world to know that this our adopted land is so steeped in corruption, and that such a stench of dirty linen offends every decent nose in the country.

We are only speaking for ourselves, but believe that the sentiments of our contemporaries are not very different from our own. We take no pleasure in heralding the fact that the people are annoyed and sickened by the effluvia of dirty linen. It is painful to do so. Our only motive is to have the filthy stuff removed from our sight and cleansed. We would rather, much rather, be able to testify that there is no dirty linen in the land. Let those who have the power to cleanse the filth that nauseates, show a sincere desire to effect a renovation, and we shall most gladly render what little assistance we are capable of by words of "advice and encouragement," and be slow to notice little unintentional slips that may occur with the best of intentions.

But if dirty linen is the special creation of those to whom we entrust the management of our national affairs, and they pile it up under our eyes to offend our noses and insult our moral sense; if they practise corruption, bribery, and dishonesty; if they appropriate our taxes for their own selfish ends, and neglect the needs of the people, are we to grin and bear it, shut our eyes and hold our tongues, or lie and say "everything is lovely and the goose hangs high," simply because if we cry out, tell the truth, and demand that the sickening mass be taken away, our voice will be heard across the water, and the people there will say that our public men are a lot of scoundrels? Decidedly, no. We cannot feel it our duty to obey the advice gratis.

One of the bitterest curses that ever afflicted humanity or crippled the energy and enterprise of a people is mismanagement of and corruption in public affairs, and it is a curse which we are not disposed to bear the infliction of patiently and uncomplainingly. Let the dirty linen be cleared out, washed, burned, or in some way got rid of, and the week subterfuge involved in the recommendation to do the washing at home will no longer need be resorted to.
