The Reason.

There are some people in Honolulu who think they are not properly clad unless the garments they wear cost $30 or $40. The reason is apparent—they are rich.

A Fact.

Everybody is not rich—in fact, most people in this world have to get a mighty move on to make both ends meet, and at the end of the year have nothing to show for their labor except an extra wrinkle or two.

Ladies.

I have something that will strike your fancy in the shape of a Jacket—a Flannel Jacket with a silk stripe—a perfect fit or no sale. I bought several cases of these Jackets very cheap for cash. They are just the thing to slip on to make a call, go to market, a picnic, or church—in fact, they are good enough or poor enough to wear anywhere and everywhere.

The Price.

Now this is the important part. After you have selected one that looks well with your dress and you find that it fits, you say, "How much?"

The Salesman

says, "$1.00, madam," or "$1.00, miss," as the case may be, and there you are. The modest Clerk does not even blush when he is told "how cheap." He is used to this kind of thing.

The Daily Bulletin.

WEDNESDAY, NOV. 28, 1894.
Gus Collander, a young Swede, was murdered by a gang of toughs while he was watching the counting of ballots in a Chicago precinct. Indignation meetings were held in nearly all the wards on the North side, to protect against the outrage and pledge united action in avenging the death of the brave man who died in defense of the ballot. Although all crimes of violence are really attacks on the community, this particular murder roused the people because it was an attack on their right to make their laws.

INDEPENDENCE.

This is Hawaiian Independence Day. It is the anniversary of the recognition of the independence of Hawaii by Great Britain and France. There was no "guarantee" of independence by those Powers, the commercial adviser to the contrary notwithstanding. If it had been a guarantee, Great Britain and France would have been compelled to demand an explanation from the United States, for her armed interference, through her representatives, with Hawaiian affairs, in the period from January 14 to April 1, inclusive, 1894. Previous to the diplomatic recognition in question on November 28, 1843, Great Britain had restored Hawaiian independence on July 31 of that year, by hauling down the British flag, which had been raised over the group in the preceding February by a hot-headed "lordly wight" commanding one of Great Britain's cruisers, and at the same time hoisting the Hawaiian flag and saluting it with all the military honors at the disposal of Queen Victoria in this port. The United States had protested against the enforced cession of the islands to Great Britain. She also declined to join with the two European Powers named in a treaty guaranteeing independence in perpetuity, and thus the guarantee business was knocked in the head. Her pronounced action in so declining was, however, tantamount to a guarantee of Hawaiian independence on her own part. Being an innocent party thus far—barring a little friction between Captain Jones of the warship Peacock and the Hawaiian Government in the matter of traversing Hawaiian independence, and being on this occasion a protesting party against its subversion, the conduct of the United States was dignified and proper no doubt. It is not necessary here to go into the details of that intensely interesting crisis in Hawaiian history. They have been thrashed out scores of times, on July thirty-firsts and November twenty-eighths, in Honolulu both on the platform and in the press. Hawaiian independence has been a rather doubtful quantity at different times since the incidents of 1843. The feeble realm has at different times had to obey, with as good grace as possible, dictates of strong nations which if she were strong she should not have done without at least some diplomatic controversy. Since the conclusion of the treaty of reciprocity with the United States in 1876, procured through the personal exertions of King Kalakaua, the islands have been practically a dependency of the United States. Independence grew dim when an American Minister to the Hawaiian court in public denounced the form of government here in vogue, and with joyous eloquence predicted its overthrow and the accession of his own country's flag. It disappeared when the same Minister acted in collusion with the leaders of that combination, while declining to consult with the representatives of the Hawaiian Government, as to the landing of the troops of his country upon Hawaiian soil, and then landed the forces under his control, which for two months and a half thereafter dominated Hawaiian soil. A semblance of independence has, however, again been restored, in the declaration of non-interference with Hawaiian internal affairs by both the President and the Congress of the United States. For what we have now received let us be truly thankful, and hope that all things have been disposed for the best.
