

nately without injury, merely because I didn't use my knees as men use theirs. As practice makes perfect, I may tell another story a few months hence, if I live through the experimental period. At present I am so surprised to see my feet so far away from each other, feeling like two lone orphans, and so absorbed in the novelty of the situation, and so lost in wonder at what may happen, as to be more anxious than happy. Bear in mind that I generally ride alone, men riders being scarce and only available on holidays.

Native women, who walk the earth as though they owned it—that is, when they are barefoot or in easy shoes—are equally matters of a horse. No bifurcated skirt for them! I don't know how they accomplish a miracle, but they do. By some legerdemain they tuck their holokas (Mother Hubbard) between their legs, twist this garment into close-fitting trousers and ride for hours without the least displacement of clothing. With or without shoes, with or without stirrups, they ride from place to place, and make or green with envy at their dexterity. On gala days they add two long streamers of gay colored cloth to their ordinary attire, and as they dash by resemble streaks of rainbow on a gallop.

White women here complain of nervous prostration and all the diseases of other climes. I am persuaded that most of their ill health is due to lack of exercise and living indoors. They eat and rarely walk, their only locomotion being in a carry-all or buggy behind a "family" horse. Even when shopping they sit in their carriages and let the clerks do the walking. Then they blame the climate when their heads ache.

Honolulu's warm climate is conducive of thirst to a greater degree than that of a colder zone. The average business man loses also; to a degree, the amount of energy and nervous force common enough in the bracing air of American cities. These two phases of our climate make it more necessary than elsewhere to stimulate the system with an invigorant. No more healthful or purer stimulus, or one more delightful to the palate, can be found, than Pabst Milwaukee beer. It is a delicious drink and is constantly on draught at the Cosmopolitan, Pacific and the Royal.
