ITEMS FROM HARBOR FRONT

Oceanic Liner Alameda en route to the Colonies.

Barkentine S. N. Castle Arrives—Steamers Keonhou, Kaala and James Makee in Port—Late Foreign Shipping.

Complaints are rife along shore on account of overloaded docks. The barkentine Kikikitai loads redwood at Eureka for Kahului.

The schooner Lyman D Foster loads lumber at Port Gamble for Hilo.

The kona last night did no damage along the water front. The barometer gave timely warning and all the vessels in the stream were secured by extra moorings.

The steamers James Makee and Keonhou which arrived in port last night sail this afternoon. The Makee takes 100 tons of coal to Kapa and the Keonhou 30 tons to Hanalei.

The Alameda brought $50,000 in coin for Bishop & Co. this morning from San Francisco. There were also 75 packages and 2 bicycles for the Frawley Company on board.

A ship, supposed to be the W. F. Babcock from Baltimore with a load of coal for the United States government, is off Koko Head. The Babcock comes from Baltimore and will load sugar for New York.

MARION TRAINING SHIP.

The Old Cruiser is Transferred to the Citizen Sailors of California.

The cruiser Marion is in future to be the training ship of the naval militia of California in place of the Camanche. The Navy Department on Nov. 6 issued an order directing that the vessel be turned over to the State for the use of the citizen sailors and at the same time an order was given to transfer the men of the Navy now on the vessel to the Mohican. Both the Marion and the Mohican are at the Navy Yard at Mare Island. The Mohican will be assigned to duty in connection with the training of apprentices enlisted on the Pacific Slope. The Marion has for a long time been the training ship of the apprentices.

The Eye In Old Age.

Dr. Chevalereau is one of the foremost eye specialists in Paris and the medical world. His opinion was therefore sought upon the effect upon eyesight in these times of continuous reading, which is such a characteristic of the age.

Speaking to a Herald correspondent, he said it was very difficult, in fact, almost impossible, to lay down any general rule on the matter. A frequent malady of the eye, as old age comes on, is cataract. This is gradual, so much so that it is often advanced far before it is noticed.

It is not probable, however, that the eyesight will suddenly fail, unless there is some extraneous cause, such as hemorrhage of the retina, which sometimes is to be feared when the patient is advanced in age.

Dr. Abadie of Rue Volney gave practically the same opinion, pointing out that it was hardly likely that any one who had enjoyed normal eyesight would at an advanced age suffer from the sudden failure of the sight unless it were caused by some shock or great emotion.—Paris Herald.

Tommy Was a Strategist.

A little boy dropped his drumstick into a well. In vain he entreated his parents, the gardener, the footman, the coachman, the cook, the housemaids to go down into the well to recover his drumstick. In his distress a brilliant expedient occurred to Master Tommy—he secretly carried off all the plate from the sideboard and threw it into the well. Great was the consternation when the plate was missed, and an active search for the robbers took place. In the midst of the alarm and the confusion Master Tommy ran with the news that he had found the plate. "Where?" was the cry. "Down the well," replied Tommy. "I saw it quite plain shining at the bottom—spoons, ladles, bread baskets, saucers and all." This household hurried to the well, at the bottom of which, sure enough, the plate was seen. A ladder was procured, a servant descended and the plate was brought up. Just before the last article was fished up Master Tommy whispered to him, "John, please bring up my drumstick when you go down for the soap suds."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

BY POLICE AT CALLAO.

Inquiry here confirms the story coming from Lima to the effect that the State Department has lodged a demand with the United States charge of legation at Lima for the release of the mate of the American bark "Uncle John." He was ashore on December 19 last at Callao, and was arrested because of his constant demand for "Rainier Beer." On tap or in bottles at the Criterion Saloon.

A LUCKY HAUL.

"Dad," exclaimed Kitty unconcernedly when the old man was comfortably ensconced in his chair, "you mentioned to us the other night the name of Dan Felony, the burglar. Will you tell us how you caught him? Jack would like to hear the story."

"Aye, he was a clever rogue, was Dan," he murmured admiringly as he beat a tattoo on the fender with two wooden stumps that did duty for his legs. "He was the slipperiest customer I ever knew, and for years he talked all our efforts to capture him."

"It happened one Sunday night about five years after I first joined the force. My beat consisted then of the shady part of Bernersdown, which was intersected by the railway, and I was generally kept fairly busy about 12 o'clock with abusive 'drunks' and blasphemous rowdies of both sexes."

"There were not many of the inhabitants who did not know me under my significant sobriquet of 'Spider.' My presence acted as an effectual soberer, a quiet word of caution from me being generally acted upon more or less graciously."

"On the Sunday night of which I tell you a cold, drizzling rain had been falling ever since I came on duty. I had been walking round for perhaps an hour when I determined to shelter for a moment or two in a friendly entry."

"It was while pulling out my knife with the intention of cutting a plug from my plug that I suddenly remembered that the shop adjoining belonged to an old pawnbroker."

"I cannot think now what whim possessed me to walk up the passage and try the door. It is one of the innumerable freaks of fancy that happen to every man and which sometimes change the whole current of his existence."

"The fact remains, however, that as the burst of light from my hallway shone on the heavy padlocks I saw that they had been tampered with, and the door was unsecured. I cautiously made my way down the entry again and flashed my light significantly three times in each direction. It was the signal of alarm given at 10 o'clock, for to sound the alarm would have been to put the wary warranter upon the alert for possible danger."

"I threw off the heavy regulation coat and freed my trunk from its case. Pulling myself together, I raised my steps and silently pushed open the door that led into the passage."

"As I listened—yes, I confess, without some feeling of apprehension—I detected the mental chirp caused by the landing of metal substances. Notably I stole to the door and peered through the keyhole."

"The interior was dimly lighted up by a guttering candle flared by some ingenious means to an enormous size that stood against the farthest wall, and as I gazed I perceived a man on his knees busily engaged in trying the effect of various skeleton keys and other contrivances upon the lock."

"Apparently it defied his efforts, for at length, with a smothered curse, he stowed them away and took out a small roll from his capacious inner trouser pocket. Quickly unfastening it, he displayed to my view a variety of delicate instruments for safe lock picking."

"It was at this moment that I noiselessly slid through the door and stood just within, with one hand grasping my trunk and the other on my hip, ready to direct the flood of light upon him. A murderous looking revolver lay on the floor close to his right hand. I had made a silent step forward, when in manipulating the glass he must have caught a reflection of my face as I crept warily toward him. Without appearing to notice anything, however, he dropped his hand unconcernedly as if to take up one of the picks, but with a sudden grab he secured the revolver, and almost ere I knew it had confronted me with the weapon pointed at my heart."

"Stand back, Spider, curse you!" he whispered harshly, and with a start I recognized him as Felony. "Stand back, or by Jove, I'll let light through you!"

"It's no go, Dan!" I replied. "Drop that plaything. The game's up! My mate's outside only waiting for the signal." And I advanced toward him.

"I don't believe you!" he snarled desperately. "Stand back, I tell you! I don't want to murder you, man, but if—"

"With a sudden movement he dashed out the light, but even as he did so with a leap I was upon him. Clutching his right arm in a deadly grip, we grappled for the mastery of the weapon."

"Silently we engaged in the terrible struggle there in the darkness, when unexpectedly, as we swung round, backed in a close embrace, my head crashed against the corner of the safe, half stunning me and causing me to momentarily lose my hold."

"But it was enough, for with a fearful wrench he twisted his arm downward and fired the revolver at my body. There was an excruciating pain in my left shoulder, and my arm fell helpless at my side as I staggered backward to the wall."

"The burglar turned to fly, but even as he did so the room door was opened wide open, a flood of light streaming upon him, and through the gloom I dimly discerned the form of the pawnbroker, with pistol extended full at the breast of the advancing housebreaker."

"Startled by the dazzling light in his eyes, the burglar started back, and in that moment, disabled as I was, I sprang upon him from behind and bore him to the floor. For some time he fought like a madman, and it required the combined efforts of the pawnbroker and myself, together with the significant threat implied by the gleaming barrel pressed against his forehead, before we could overpower him and had the darbies safely planted on his wrists."

"His little bit of lead kept me off duty for six weeks, but I had the satisfaction of knowing that when he was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude London was rid of her most desperate burglar—and through nothing else but the lucky—or shall I say providential?—whim that prompted me to try old Mikestein's side door in the darkness, early hours of that Monday morning."—The Bits.
