Shellfish and Typhoid Fever.
The medical officer to the Saddleworth District Council (Mr. W. H. F. Ramsden) lately drew the attention of his authority to a case of typhoid in the district, which he thought had been contracted from eating shellfish when on a visit to Blackpool. He was told that visitors and others went to the end of the pier, where there was much sewerage contamination, and knocked off mussels. He feared a large number of attacks of typhoid had been contracted in this way. Whether this particular case of illness originated in exactly this way or not, there can be no doubt that it is high time the beds from which shellfish come to the market should be under some stringent supervision. We have repeatedly drawn attention to this serious and quite unnecessary risk to the public health.—British Medical Journal.

Only 23 men in every 1000 serving in the British army are six feet and upwards in height; 33 in every 1000 are five feet eleven inches; and 58 in every 1000 five feet ten inches. There are 785 in every 1000 army men under five feet nine inches.

"Our customers say you manufacture three of the best remedies on earth," said the mercantile firm of Haas, Harris, Brim & McLain, of Dawson, Ga., in a recent letter to the Chamberlain Medicine Co. Chamberlain's Pain Balm is the finest preparation in the world for rheumatism, neuralgia, lame back, quinsy, sore throat, cuts, bruises, burns, scalds, pains and swellings. Spices as Protectives in Epidemic Diseases.
An Edinburgh graduate in medicine, Dr. J. Carne Ross, now physician to Ancoats Hospital, Manchester, has published a notable pamphlet on the use of spices in certain diseases. The statements of his own experience, both personal and with patients, are very remarkable, and worthy of the consideration of medical men. Having himself had repeated attacks of influenza, Dr. Ross resolved to try large doses of decoction of cinnamon, half an ounce every forty minutes, and after about two and a half hours, the severest illness, in 1892, was thoroughly conquered. The temperature had been 101 degrees, with rigors, malaise, pains and total prostration. In a few hours he was as well as possible. He tried the same treatment on several patients, and then in various cases of scarlet fever, measles and other maladies, with great success. He attributes the power of the spice to its sterilizing influence against microbic disease. The details of his cases are given, and he also states some curious historical facts: "No one can read the records of the household expenses of our ancestors without being struck by the enormous quantities of spices that they consumed. At the marriage feast, for instance, of the Earl of Carrick, son of Robert Bruce, about 200 pounds of cinnamon were used, besides other spices." Is it not possible that the use of spices in large quantities was the echo of some forgotten knowledge? May not some wise man, some Jewish or Arabic physician, have suggested the use of spices as a protective against disease, and not merely a stimulant to the appetite? At all events, Dr. Carne Ross has found in the use of spices an effective remedy in some of the worst diseases in modern times.—Leisure Hour.
