REPUBLICANS AT WORK

There was another large attendance at the meeting of the Republicans at Kalibi Camp last night. S. Mahelona presided. After a few remarks by the president, S. C. Dwight was introduced as the first speaker of the evening. Mr. Dwight told of his experiences while on the mainland and of the wonderful prosperity under a Republican administration. There was work in plenty and the wages were first class. A Republican victory in the county elections would mean the same prosperity for Hawaii.

Harry Murray, the next speaker, told of how the Republicans had fulfilled all their promises and how the Home Rulers had not. The Republican party had given the people county government and the inventor knowing more about the machinery than anyone else, should be given a chance to run it. W. T. Rawlins said the time had come when responsibilities would be placed on every shoulder and the time had come to put aside all petty jealousies. Men should be put in office who would run the county government economically and intelligently and not men who would run it to ruin and cause weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth. In conclusion, Mr. Rawlins paid a tribute to R. N. Boyd, Republican candidate for county surveyor, saying that he had seen work laid out by this man on Hawaii which were excellent examples of the engineering art. There was absolutely no question as to Mr. Boyd's ability to fill the office.

Others who spoke were A. M. Brown, Charles Clark, Frank Pahlia, Jack Lucas, R. N. Boyd, J. W. Pratt and Isaac Sherwood. Henry Vlda was the last speaker. He told of his experiences with the Home Rulers during the last Legislature and of the methods used by Charles Booth to get his Pauoa water scheme through. He asked the women present in the audience to keep their husbands indoors on election morning until they had agreed to vote the straight Republican ticket. Women should take an interest in the campaign because if the Home Rulers were elected the men would be thrown out of work and the women and children would have to go hungry.

Lipton Will Compete With Beef Trust

Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 6.—Sir Thomas Lipton has purchased the old Cooper plantation in Southern Georgia, consisting of 1,000 acres of choice fruit and vegetable land, which will be at once turned into a truck farm for the London market. This purchase is in connection with the scheme of Great Britain and the Southern States Cattle and Abattoir Company, which intends to cover Georgia with cattle and farms to feed the English market in competition with the beef trust. This company is a branch of the Lipton Limited Company, and it is understood that Sir Thomas will find a market in England for its products. There is no finer tract of land in Georgia than the Cooper place, and satisfaction is felt here over the announcement that it will be put into active cultivation by Sir Thomas.

The barkentine La-haina was still at Eleieie waiting for orders. Light southwest winds and smooth seas crossing the channel. Fine weather on Kauai."

Perkins Confers With Beet Sugar Magnate

New York, Oct. 6.—United States Senator George C. Perkins of California returned today from Europe on the Red Star liner Finland. He sailed on this port last July and has since then been visiting places of interest abroad, mostly on the Continent. His daughter, Miss Grace Perkins, his companion on the trip, returned with him.

Perkins expressed himself as greatly impressed with the interesting political situation in England. In Germany his attention was attracted by the care given to the preservation of the forests and the making of good roads. On leaving the ship today the Senator joined the California colony that makes the Waldorf-Astoria its home while in this city. This evening Perkins spent some time walking about in the hotel in company with Henry Oxnard. The two were observed to be engaged in earnest conversation.

Forgery has possibly been committed in the purported withdrawal of J. K. Kekaula as a Home Rule candidate for Supervisor in West Hawaii County. J. P. Makahala declares the signature attached to the communication received by Electoral Registrar Buckland is not that of Kekaula. The Governor directed that Kekaula's name be placed on the ballot.

The office was a large and dreary room, with a view of back yards. There was a broad couch in a corner with a pile of cheap sofa pillows, against which the doctor had probably been reclining. At the foot of the couch and oddly propped against the back of a chair was a single silken pillow beautifully embroidered. From a professional standpoint the room lacked many things that money can buy, and to Kendall, who was so far removed from the need of fees that he had almost forgotten the possibility of any doctor having to subsist upon them, the place spoke loudly of poverty. As for Blair himself, he matched his surroundings, for his mood was far from cheerful.

"What can I do for you, doctor?" he asked in the tone of one who has ceased to expect good from any interview. "Miss Miller, who is my patient at the hospital, wishes to see you," said Kendall, "and I called to ask you to come over." "I hope a consultation isn't necessary," said Blair, with a faint smile. "I understood that her recovery was assured." "It is in regard to Miss Maclane," responded Kendall, with considerable embarrassment. Blair faintly groaned. "I wish I had kept my mouth shut," he said. "Of course if I can do anything to please Miss Miller," he added hastily, "I shall be delighted. I know her slightly, and she is a very charming girl. But really this matter of Miss Maclane is wearing my life out. Policemen, reporters, unidentified vagabonds—"

THE NEW "SWEATER"

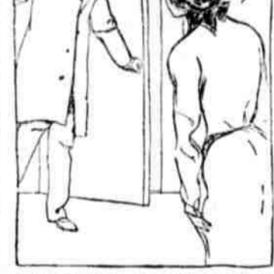

Knitted "sweaters" are worn on cool days for out-door sports of all kinds. They come in all colors, but the pretty light shades are most in favor. They are a very becoming as well as comfortable garment. The pretty new turtleneck young lady wears is of white felt and black chenille braid, with black taffeta folds under the brim, and a very new black and white wing.

sons why she should tell Brenda everything, and, as to that, indeed, he had no positive knowledge that she had not already done so. Moreover, to have told him would have been merely to let another person into the secret, whatever it might be, since it was not he, but Blair, who had the power to check the attacks upon Brenda. Still, he could not help feeling isolated, the more because of his reflection that Brenda might already know all.

From this youthful frame of mind he passed to one more mature and practical. It might be that Blair was not worthy of this confidence. Without pretending to know what Elsie's secret might be, Kendall surely did not wish it to be betrayed. All consideration of abstract justice had vanished in personal interest. He was for Elsie with a genuine loyalty, and Blair had not impressed him favorably. He seemed a morose and discontented man, with an unsatisfied craving for something, probably money, and he had not a perfectly honest eye. Supposing that Elsie's secret involved Alden and that Alden had really become rich in a way invisible to his closest friends—well, in that case it might be that Dr. Blair would be able to afford a better office.

With these thoughts in mind Kendall ventured to caution Elsie against the evil incident to an unwise trust in the discretion and the promises of one's fellow creatures, but Elsie seemed to have an excellent opinion of her own good judgment, as often happens with the young.

When Blair appeared, Kendall mentioned to him that Elsie desired to see him alone for a few minutes, adding, "I was not aware you made it a matter of conscience." "She seems to have some communication which is in the highest degree confidential." "I shall treat whatever she says as a matter between doctor and patient," replied Blair, somewhat too promptly, as Kendall thought.

Nothing of importance occurred during the time when Brenda and Kendall were present with Blair in Elsie's room. It might have been one of the doctor's regular professional calls. The private conference lasted not more than five minutes, and it produced no very notable effect upon Elsie, but Dr. Blair seemed to have received a considerable surprise. Kendall was far from satisfied with the man's looks. He was not only agitated, but he had the air of one who is Both scared and pleased, like a man who sees an opportunity the nature of which both attracts and frightens him. And the thought came to Kendall that this secret might affect Brenda, whose father was very weak in the nerves and very strong in the pocket. On the face of the matter, however, it appeared that Elsie had achieved a notable success, for Blair said to Brenda: "Miss Miller tells me that you are much disturbed by the absurd attempts to identify you with the so-called 'mysterious woman' in this unfortunate affair. I think I can put a stop to these stories."

CHAPTER XIV.

"THRIFT, HORATIO, THRIFT!" The next morning's papers contained interviews with Dr. Blair in which he stated in the most positive manner that the mysterious woman was not Miss Maclane. This did not have the effect of taking Brenda entirely out of print, but it inspired all the newspaper writers with caution, for, though some of them were not able to believe that Blair was telling the truth, it was impossible to overlook the fact that he was the only witness. The most serious of the immediate results of this publication was experienced by Dr. Blair himself about 10 o'clock in the forenoon, when he received a call from Captain Neale. The captain seemed not to be representing the department upon this occasion, for he was in the dress of a private citizen. Even his shoes were different from a policeman's characteristic footwear. As the apparel evidently was not worn for purposes of disguise, it might be assumed that Mr. Neale had come upon a personal errand. When admitted to Dr. Blair's office, he first showed interest in all the doors opening from the room; then he bestowed a moment's attention upon some of the doctor's effects which had been collected as if to be packed in a large trunk. "Going away?" inquired Neale. "Move," responded Blair. "What for?" "You've succeeded in spoiling my practice around here," was the reply. "I am not more modest than other doctors, but the kind of conscientiousness which comes from having a uniformed policeman call at the house every ten minutes is not a good advertisement. So I have engaged other quarters."

Having done this, he looked Blair in the eye and said: "I don't know whether you're going or not." "Make your mind easy," replied the doctor. "I am." "You're an important witness in this case," said the captain, "and I want you where I can get my hands on you." "Well, I'm not going far." The captain screwed up his queer eyebrows in his own peculiar fashion. "It's my opinion," said he, "that you're going to the house of detention." Blair looked uneasy, but he mustered a smile. "The house of detention is for the poor," he said. "It is for people who will stand being imprisoned six months or a year for nothing without making any fuss about it." "You're poor enough, my friend," replied the captain, "and I'll see that you don't make any fuss. I've got a story all fixed up that will keep you quiet." Blair let the lid of the trunk fall heavily, and then sat down on top of it. "Well, you needn't tell me what it is," he said. "I'll take your word for it that it's a good one. In short, you intend to ruin me in this town." The captain put his hand into his pocket in a way that made Blair nervous, but it was nothing more formidable than a piece of chewing tobacco that appeared. Neale nodded slowly as he bit off a piece. "From the beginning of this case," said the doctor, "I have been totally unable to understand your game. What is it?" "My game," replied the captain, "is to take good care of Joseph Neale." "Well, said Blair, "what have I done to prevent it?" "Ever heard the story of the beggar who asked the professional charity man for a dime?" "I don't remember it," said the doctor. "The charity man said: 'Go over on the other side of the street. I'm working this side.'" Blair appeared to ponder deeply upon the significance of this ancient tale in the present situation. "Look here," said the captain suddenly. "You saw Brenda Maclane coming out of that house, and you had sense enough to keep still until you found out where you stood. That was all right. You found out, right away, what kind of a father she had, and you knew that your information was worth money. Now, don't jump. I've looked you up, and I've found out that you're not above that sort of thing. Very well; few of us are, but when you found out that I was 'on' you ought to have done one of two things—quit or let me in."
