LIGHTHOUSE KEEPERS

Captain Niblack today issued the following notification of civil service examinations for lighthouse keepers: Office of Assistant Light-House Inspector, Twelfth District, Honolulu, T. H., January 27, 1904. Applications for civil service examination will be received at this office during the next thirty days for filling the positions now occupied by persons holding temporary appointments in the Territory of Hawaii, and for establishing registers of eligibles from which appointments of keepers and assistant keepers of light-houses will be made. Applicants must be citizens of the United States, over eighteen and under fifty years of age.

Blank forms can be obtained upon application to this office.

A. P. NIBLACK, Lieutenant-Commander, U. S. N. Chairman Local Civil Service Board for the Light-House Service (Inspector's Department). Collector of the Port E. R. Stackable has issued the following order: Hours of labor of all clerks and other employees, of whatever grade or class, in the Treasury Department, except those required by law or regulation to work more than seven hours a day, extended from 9 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., with an allowance of one-half hour for luncheon. On Saturdays during the months of July, August and September, the hours of labor will be from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m., without allowance for luncheon. This gives the employees an additional half hour's work per day as work heretofore was over at 4 p. m.

Books, Bookish People and Things

We get no good by being ungenerous even to a book.

E. B. Browning.

"Children's Ways." By James Sully. Clo., 193 pp.; D. Appleton & Co.; New York.

An authorized and revised edition of "Studies of Childhood" by the same author, who, with an intimate knowledge of the psychology of childhood, combines unusual sympathy for the helpless creatures who are so much loved but so much misunderstood.

Dr. Sully begins by telling us that one of the certain things about childhood is that it is "fancy-ful, the age of dreaming, a life of happy make-believe." That this is the normal child-temperament cannot be denied, and that the exceptions are regrettable products will be readily acknowledged by students of child life.

To be able to meet the psychological demands upon it, a child must have fancy enough to gild his material world and make it ideal. He lives in a continual ecstasy, and mentally as well as physically rejoices in an almost measureless enthusiasm. His "tender juices" have not been "hardened into wood." He receives each new impression with joy and makes a picture of it that cannot fade; a picture which comes back in after years, rising up like misty phantasmagoria.

"A child that did not want to play and cared nothing for the marvels of storyland would surely be regarded as queer, and not just what a child ought to be." The child is the true poet, and the real poet may in many respects be called a child; for he has retained more than any one else (not childish but) childlike traits. He sings, he loves, he hates, he spurns, he believes as the child. Like the child, he grasps quickly the aspects of things, and reluctantly goes into abstract matters.

As examples of child-fancy Dr. Sully mentions the following: "A child calls a star an 'eye.' A little boy looking at his mother's spectacles said, 'Little windows.'"

Stars were described by one child as "Cinders from God's store," and butterflies as "panicles flying."

A little friend of The Bulletin Bookman's, after looking at the big Dipper, remarked: "When it rains rain hard God must be 'frowing it out of the 'big dipper,' and a small boy of five, whose attention had been called to a gorgeous sunset (and who on various occasions had been told not to use all his paints at once) said quickly to me, 'I guess the Lord lets his angels use all the paints they want.'"

The development of this fancy is regulated largely by temperament and surroundings. It can be deformed or killed; it is often abnormally excited. Continuous work, responsibility, too much study, the inculcation of certain practical ideas now too current in the United States, may dull a child's fancy, and discourage the spirit which indulges in it.

NERVOUSNESS upsets the stomach and prevents the nutritive elements from getting into the blood. The stomach finally rebels against food and the result is dyspepsia. The Bitters will strengthen the nerves and cures dyspepsia, constipation, biliousness, flatulency, also create a hearty appetite, purify the blood and build up the system. Be sure to try it.

The author next takes up the subject of "romancing," and explains why children of exuberant fancy and vivid imagination (the coming writers of our novels and painters of our pictures) may, without any moral perversion whatever, tell what we call lies. This is a matter for parents to understand, or with the best of motives they may another desirable development.

Under the title, "The Enchantment of Play," we are shown how necessary to a healthy child are its recreations. Its "make-believe" passages have a "close kinship to art," says the author. "The passion for play is essentially active; it is the old longing to act a part—it is thus in a way dramatic."

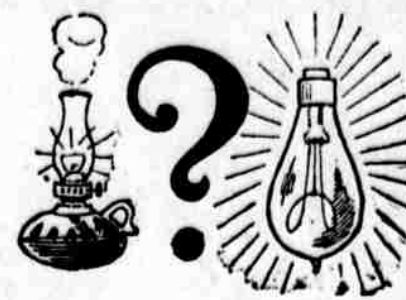

"A child will play at being something for a whole day. For example, a boy of three and a half years would one day lead the life of a coal-heaver; another day that of a soldier, and so forth, and was rather particular in expecting his mother to remember which of his favorite characters he was adopting on this or that day."

The whole book is intensely interesting, and the various phases of child life are discussed with rare discrimination. "The Mysteries of 'Dollodom,'" "Serious Side of Play," "Attacking Our Language," "The Serious Searcher," "Good and Bad in the Making," are suggestive and entertaining. The last chapter takes up the drawings of small children and gives some amusing pictures made by little hands.

This study by some may be considered trivial, but it is a much deeper study than at first appears, and most of the field lies fallow. That Dr. Sully comes to his subject with a due appreciation of its importance (and without that pedagogical narrowness found in those who pursue the technicalities of psychology, pedagogy, and so on) is plain when he says at the outset: "The serious examination of things begins early. Most of us have been subjected to the searching gaze of an infant's eyes when we first made it overtures of friendship. How much this fixed gaze of a child of six months takes in nobody can say."

Dr. J. G. Holland's beautiful poem beginning, "Who can tell what a baby thinks?" expresses the same idea. A baby may not be able to run a sugar plantation, but it can do other things quite as much to its credit.
