

WOLGAST BEATS MORAN IN THIRTEENTH ROUND

BIG CROWD GATHERS TO SEE GOOD FIGHT—WINNER LEADS ALL WAY.

A very large crowd witnessed the Wolgast-Moran fight at the Eighth-street arena, San Francisco, on July 4, when Wolgast put the Britisher out of commission in the thirteenth round after leading the fight from the beginning.

The body blows of Wolgast did the trick, and Moran could not prevent them from coming in. The account of the fight, by rounds, which appeared in the Examiner is as follows:

Round 1.

Wolgast covered and went into a clinch. They swayed around and both began punching with a free arm. Moran rooted with his head as though inclined to butt. They separated after a few punches and then clinched again. It was more like a wrestling match than a fight. There was clinch after clinch. As Wolgast bored in and covered up, Moran grabbed him about the waist. They tried to punch each other in the clinches, but the blows were harmless. Wolgast hit Moran a hard left hook on the jaw while breaking. It was clinch after clinch, with Wolgast having the best of the fighting. He used a "loop the loop" right several times as they hung together, bringing blood from the mouth. They were clinched at the bell.

Round 2.

Wolgast dove into a clinch. They wrestled over to the ropes and Moran put in two left uppercuts on the face. Wolgast freed the left and got in several uppercuts. When they broke, Moran kept away and sent in straight punches. Wolgast closed on him again and drove in a hard left on the stomach. Moran got in two poky lefts and there was blood in Wolgast's nostrils. Wolgast rushed in with a left swing to the body, and in the clinch that followed got in several short-arm rights around the stomach. Moran backed Wolgast to the ropes and dealt him a hard right on the jaw. They stood off and fought, both men getting in left swings on the face. They were clinched at the end of the round.

Round 3.

Wolgast came in with his face covered and swung a left into the stomach. They clinched and poked each other with free lefts. Moran ducked a hard left swing and they clinched again. Both men were uppercutting as they hung together. Moran with the left and Wolgast with the right. Wolgast got in the more damaging blows. Moran got in a stiff right on the jaw and followed with a right on the body. They clinched again and were hanging together when the gong rang. Wolgast went to his corner with a black eye.

Round 4.

Moran met his man with a left between the eyes. They clinched. Moran smothered a left for the body and drove his right into the pit of the stomach. He sidestepped when Wolgast tried to get to close quarters. Moran stepped away from a left body punch and sent a right against the chin. Wolgast closed in with two fierce right-hand body blows. They clinched and fought fouly, each pushing the other's head back. Wolgast put in a left swing on the side and they clinched. Moran hooked his opponent several times with the left and Wolgast did damaging work with a right uppercut. Wolgast missed a couple of times with left swings and Moran caught him on the point of the chin with a right. As usual, they were clinging together at the bell. The referee warned both men for rough work.

Round 5.

They were in a clinch in an instant. Wolgast got to the body with a left and uppercut Owen in the face three times with the right. Moran pushed him away and sent in a right against the face. They clinched again and sent in pokes and uppercuts. Moran caught Wolgast a hard right on the jaw, causing his head to toss. Wolgast, nothing daunted, kept after Moran, getting in hard lefts and rights on the body. Owen got in a hard right uppercut, but Ad still rushed to close quarters. Wolgast freed his right arm and jolted Moran in the face a number of times. Moran sent in one hard left hook, and followed with a right on the ear. Wolgast seemed to be the stronger of the pair.

Round 6.

They did not clinch as readily at the beginning of this round. After several passes, Wolgast got home with a left on the jaw. He went at Moran hand ever hand, but was short and they clinched near the ropes. Moran put in a left on the body and two lefts on the mouth. It was a scrambling fight for a while near the ropes, both boys scoring with lefts and rights. When they broke, Moran got in a punishing right uppercut on the mouth. Wolgast bored in with his face covered and swung a left on the face. They clinched and punched while hanging together. When they broke, Moran shot in a telling right on the chin. Wolgast came back with a left dig in the stomach.

Round 7.

Moran was there with two tight left taps on the face. He danced away and Wolgast rushed him to the ropes with a right on the ribs. They clinched and had the fiercest rally of the fight.

Wrenching their arms free, they smashed away with might and main. They broke for an instant and closed in again and Wolgast was the stronger of the two. He got in a flumber of right uppercuts which hurt. The referee parted them and Moran sent in a left on the stomach and a right on the jaw. Wolgast steadied himself awhile, then cut loose, pressing Moran into a corner and hammering him repeatedly on the ribs with a right. Moran was inclined to keep away. He shot in an occasional left or right through Moran's guard, but usually got worse than he gave. Wolgast's best punches were body blows.

Round 8.

Moran reached the face with a light left and they clinched. Moran shot in a straight left after the break. In a clinch Wolgast hammered on the kidneys with his right and also drove a right uppercut against the chin. In a mix-up Moran fell through the ropes and Wolgast helped him back into the ring. Wolgast threw a hard right into the stomach. He showed superior strength in pushing Moran around and he got in two punches to every one of Moran's in the clinches. Moran's head was tilting, but he faced the music and sent in punishing rights on the jaw. Wolgast followed him around the ring, rooting with both hands, and Moran came back at his man with right crosses and uppercuts. Both men were well hammered in this round.

Round 9.

They clinched and Wolgast used a right on the ribs many times. Moran tried left uppercuts and Wolgast worked a right uppercut. Moran got the more punishment at close quarters, but when they broke he sent a hard right on the chin. Wolgast pressed Moran against the ropes and they had a fierce rally. For a while Wolgast sent in the hardest punches, and then Moran got to the face with right and left uppercuts, and the scoring seemed to even up. Wolgast followed Moran around again. Moran's lips were pasted and he was breathing heavily. They were in a clinch and punching each other viciously at the gong.

Round 10.

Wolgast followed Moran around, and swung a hard left on the head. Moran shot in a snappy left on the jaw. Wolgast closed on him and they swayed around without punching. A fierce left from Wolgast glanced off Moran's head. Wolgast then closed in and they fought like demons. Wolgast's gloves landed rapidly on face and ribs, and Moran, who was carried nearly through the ropes, came back with stiff right and left uppercuts. They finally hung together and both seemed glad of the rest. When they resumed operations again Wolgast, while hanging on, wove his arm around Moran's guard several times and put in a number of hard blows on the face. They were in a corner hammering each other at the bell.

Round 11.

Moran put in two light lefts on the face. He followed with two more, but they were merely taps. After that another brace of lefts shot into Wolgast's face. Wolgast chopped Moran on the head with a right and poked him on the face with a left. A clinch and Wolgast used the right in loop-the-loop fashion, reaching the side of the face. Moran took to jolting with the left and clinching, and in the clinches Wolgast was there with the right loop-the-loop. Moran was busy with that straight left, but it was a very light punch. Moran swung the right and it glanced off Wolgast's head. Wolgast rushed, swinging left for body and head and missing every time.

Round 12.

They went into a clinch and both hammered at the kidney region with the right. They broke and clinched again. Moran using lefts and Wolgast rights. Moran occasionally rolled his head around until his head pressed against Wolgast's throat and was hooted for doing so. There was a good deal of clinch fighting. Wolgast getting in the more solid punches. Moran put a straight left on the head and a right on the chin. Wolgast put a right to the jaw. Another clinch and more loop-the-loop punches from Wolgast. Moran paying him back with left punches on the face. Moran got in a smart right on the chin and followed with three left uppercuts on the mouth. The fight had slowed down considerably in this round. Just before the bell Wolgast, while hanging on, sent in an overhead left which made Moran wince. He went to his corner with his lips parted and his seconds busied themselves sponging his mouth. It looked as though the teeth had cut into the flesh.

Round 13.

Moran was there with a left jolt and they came to a clinch. Moran got in one right uppercut and then Wolgast pinned him against the ropes, showering lefts and rights on the body and lefts on the face. Moran's mouth was wide open as though his jaw was broken, and he seemed to stop fighting. Wolgast whipped a hard right into the heart region and swung a left on the jaw. Moran fell to the mat, still open-mouthed and with his eyes rolling, and was counted out.

BALDWIN'S PEOPLE GATHER AT BURIAL

Henry P. Baldwin, the Maui capitalist, was buried yesterday afternoon in Makawao cemetery from the family home, Maluhia, in the midst of a scene impressive in the unanimous reverence done the memory of the man and citizen. As in Honolulu, so throughout the island of Maui business was suspended yesterday afternoon, and in the harbors of Lahaina and Kahului flags were flown at half-mast.

From all over the Territory came people to attend the funeral, and thousands of laborers from the plantation camps gathered along the roads near Maluhia. Many of the people carried half-masted banners or Japanese streamers as emblems of sorrow.

The Rev. E. B. Turner, pastor of the Makawao Foreign Church, of which Mr. Baldwin was a member, assisted by Rev. R. B. Dodge of Wailuku, conducted the funeral ceremonies. The services were quite simple and the impressiveness was rendered all the greater by the quiet character of the rites. Rev. Mr. Turner spoke briefly on the virtues and splendid character of Mr. Baldwin. The services closed with prayer by the Rev. D. W. K. White, pastor of the Wainoa Church, of which Mr. Baldwin's father was a pioneer pastor.

The pall-bearers were Senator S. E. Kalama, D. T. Fleming, Doctor William F. McConkey of Makawao, J. B. Thompson, L. M. Baldwin, W. A. Baldwin, J. N. S. Williams and W. F. Pogue. The casket was of koa wood and was taken to the cemetery in a hearse with carriages following. Mrs. H. P. Baldwin and son, Dr. Baldwin and his wife, were in the first carriage. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Rice, of Kaula, daughter and son-in-law of the deceased, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Cooke and Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Baldwin were in following carriages. ## CUMMINS SEES SUGAR CHANGE

Iowa Senator Predicts Congress Will Revise Tariff Schedule.

WASHINGTON, July 2. — Senator Cummins of Iowa, leading Republican progressive, predicted today that at least five tariff revision bills, in addition to the reciprocity bill, would be passed by the Senate at this session.

These revision bills are the farmers' free list, wool, cotton, steel and sugar, with a possibility of a revised schedule on oilcloth and linoleum.

"I believe enough Democratic and progressive votes will be found to revise these schedules," said Senator Cummins.

Senator Cummins said this would involve much discussion, but he thought most of it would come before the reciprocity agreement was voted on. He expects a vote on reciprocity about August 1st. He said he did not think votes on the other bills would be delayed to any great extent after that.

He said it was true the progressive Republicans would not accept the Democratic bills on the various schedules, though they might accept some features of them. He predicted there would be a disposition on both sides to give mutual concessions.

Senator Cummins expressed confidence that Congress would not adjourn without revising the sugar schedule.

1700 PASSENGERS TAKEN FROM STRANDED SHIP, AND VESSEL FLOATED

NEW YORK, June 24.—With spray from waves breaking over her decks and superstructure, a thirty-mile wind rocking her, the North German Lloyd liner Princess Irene was hard aground on the dangerous sand bar off Lone Hill, near the eastern end of Fire Island, N. Y. Six ocean-going tugs straddled at their hawsers to drag her into deep water. The United States revenue cutter Seneca led by the passengers began. The excellent discipline among the ship's crew and the firmness of the officers prevented panic in the steerage, where hundreds of excitable Italians and Greeks grew restless under restraint, but all were saved and the ship afterward floated.
