HOME COMING DAY IN LANCASTER

made desolate and home in ashes but he came back to become a hero greater than he had been in the War Between the States. The men who led in the resuscitation of the South were Confederate soldiers.

"What about their cause? Were they right or wrong?" he asked. And Dr. Lodge answered this question in no uncertain terms. He referred with impatience to those who would remind us that its no use talking, that we were misguided but that as the war is all over, we should take up the ideas of the Yankees, fall in and get on the band wagon. "I tell them 'no,'" declared Dr. Lodge. "We were born Southerners and Southerners we will die." He denounced as a "black lie" the charge that the South fought for slavery, making it plain to his hearers that local self government was the principle for which they contended. "They fought for the right of white men to govern themselves," he affirmed. Dr. Lodge expressed his belief that that right must be upheld until we are ready to turn things over to "petticoat government."

"Had we a right to withdraw?" he asked, and answered this question so emphatically that any child could have appreciated the reasons why the South had a just fight. He quoted from the original draft of the Declaration and other revered documents to prove that the states were sovereign and independent. Dr. Lodge deplored the fact that we, the people who have made the most history, have been neglectful about writing and preserving it. He showed the superiority of South Carolina's distinguished Hayne over Webster, for whom Hayne was more than a match in debate. "Who was to blame for slavery?" was the next pertinent question answered by Dr. Lodge, who showed that New England, after growing rich in the slave trade, "sold her slaves to the South and then came South with soldiers and cannon to turn them loose." The speaker told several anecdotes which pointed out clearly the facts he so eloquently stressed. He closed with a plea to the sons of the South that they should never forget the men who wore the gray, that they should be true to the "Knights of the Southern Cross." This eloquent address, delivered with fire and enthusiasm, by a very intense and loyal Southerner, was brought to a close by the following verses, Dr. Lodge's own composition, which are the embodiment of true Southern sentiment:

THE SOLDIERS LED BY LEE.
In lay and legend deathless,
The bards of Hellas tell
Of deeds that leave us breathless
And bound in awesome spell;

And Rome has won the thunder
Of all the world's applause,
For mighty works of wonder
Wrought erstwhile in her cause;

But neither Greek nor Roman,
Though rightly bound with bays,
'E'er won against the foeman,
In old heroic days.

Such fame of fadeless splendor,
Such homage from the free,
As proudly now we render,
The soldiers led by Lee.

The soldiers led by Lee! The soldiers led by Lee!
O, never the fame of a single name
Forgotten here shall be.

While shines the sun,
While rivers run,
As long as the jessamine blooms,
We'll sing their praise,
We'll walk in their ways,
We'll cherish their memories and guard their tombs.

O, not 'neath sounding wave,
O, not in the lonely grave,
The heroes lie whose deeds for aye
Shall jewel the pages of fame.

They are sepulchred in our hearts;
In our lives they still have parts,
And our souls, like poet's lyre,
Are a-tremble with the fire
Of the passion that we feel,
And the pity, as we kneel
'Mid scenes their blood makes sacred

Till time himself expire.

O son of the Southland, never forget
The heroes that wore the gray,
For dear is the land they fought for yet

As in that elder day,
O, daughter of Dixie, be true, be true,
To the knights of the Southern Cross,
For they shed their blood in a tide
for you,
And the best you can give is still but dross.

O, well-loved land of cotton,
Where the sweet magnolias bloom,
Ne'er once hast thou forgotten,
How dread so'er thy doom.

It may be at the spindle,
It may be in the field,
But ever thine eye doth kindle,
Always thy love's revealed.

If but the passing stranger
A word doth speak to thee
Of those bright sons of danger,
The soldiers led by Lee.

The thin, gray line grows thinner still
The sun sinks down behind the hill,
And, ancestral Death, with finger
chill,
Is touching one by one the host.

With tear-dimmed eyes we see the gaps,
With saddened ears we hear the
"taps,"
We shudder at the shroud that wraps
Each trooper for his last repose.

With Jackson they are crossing now

ONE NEGRO KILLS ANOTHER.
Alex Mackey Victim of Arthur Harper.

Sheriff Hunter was summoned by telephone this morning to investigate the killing of Alex Mackey, near Pleasant Hill last night, and to apprehend the party responsible therefor. A shot had been heard, followed by a woman's scream, about one o'clock this morning and when Mackey's body was found, after which Sheriff Hunter was soon on the scene, the sheriff went at once to the dead man's home. He found Mackey's wife hysterical and apparently unacquainted with the circumstances of her husband's death. Upon inquiry he soon found, however, that a colored girl at Mackey's home, Carrie McIlwain, had witnessed the killing. She told Mr. Hunter that she had been to "Bright Light" colored church with Arthur Harper, colored, and that when Harper met Mackey, who was on his way from Count Calvary, another colored church, Harper shot Mackey without warning. Mr. Charlie Robinson took Sheriff Hunter in his automobile to Rich Hill and within fifteen minutes he had arrested Harper, whom he brought here to jail. Harper claims that Mackey tried to slap Carrie McIlwain and that he shot at him to scare him, with the result already stated.

BETTER THAN EXPECTED.

Hirschs' Annual August Sale is the Sensation of the Day.

When Hirsch Brothers decided to put on their usual August sale a few days ago they did not really expect the rush of business that greeted their opening date. However, as Mr. Ben Hirsch said, "We have the goods and the prices and the people know our methods, so we will sell the goods in spite of hard times." These merchants called on The News man for a double-page, two-color advertisement, and it was up to The News man to "deliver the goods." All the boys in the shop got very busy and the result was the first two-color ad ever printed in The News. After we got the big issue off we went around to Hirschs' and had a "look in." 'Twas like a bee-hive, and folks were buying as if it were the last chance. Some of the prices are ridiculous; for instance, an umbrella for 29c, a handkerchief for a penny; shoes at about half, suits and pants cut in half—the price, not the garment; an art square for $1.89. And so on down the line.

Hirschs' believe in advertising in The News. They use very few circulars and find that their space in The News is an asset.
