ADDRESS OF MAJ. R. H. FORSTER, Delivered before the Reunion of the Veterans Club of Cass County, Pa., Sept. 2nd, 1897.

(Conclusion.)

On the 29th we marched to Uniontown, and it will long be remembered, by those who made it as the big march. The distance was thirty-five miles and the time twelve hours. It was an exhausting day's work, and many were the stragglers left by the wayside. We rested over the 30th, and on the first day of July went to Gettysburg by way of Taneytown. It is a singular fact that while approaching Gettysburg not a sound of the conflict then raging between the advance portions of the two armies reached our ears, and not until about dark when an ambulance with the body of the lamented General Reynolds passed us, did we know that there had been a fight that day. During the night of the 1st we bivouacked to the right of the Taneytown road, within two miles of the battlefield. On the morning of the 2d we advanced to the front, after an inspection of arms, prepared to bear our part in the great battle of the war. The action of the 1st had not been favorable, though it probably secured to the army of the Potomac the strong position held on the 2d and 3d against which Lee hurled his forces in vain.

The 148th went through the actions of the two days with great credit, and suffered severely in killed and wounded. The heaviest loss occurred in the evening of the 2d, while the regiment was engaged in front of Round Top. Capt. Robert M. Forster, of Company C, was killed and Lieut. John A. Bayard, of Company H, mortally wounded. Capt. Forster was an able officer, and his death was a great loss. As a disciplinarian he had no superior in the regiment, and took great pride in always having his company in good condition for duty. Lieut. Bayard was a fine drill master, and the ease and grace with which he handled a company on parade was often a subject of remark.

After the battle we remained on the field over the 4th, and then moved around to Baltimore turnpike, at Two Taverns. From there we marched by way of Taneytown and Middletown, back to Frederick, and from Frederick, by way of Crumpton's Gap to the Potomac, near Williamsport, where we were again in the presence of Lee's army, the position of the 148th being directly in front of St. James College. Lee withdrew across the river and we then marched to Harper's Ferry, passing over the old battle field of Antietam, and in a very few days we were again upon the "sacred soil" of Virginia. We marched down Loudon Valley, stopping at Snicker's, Ashby's and Manassas Gaps without encountering the enemy. Then we reached Warrington, and from there moved across Orange and Alexandria railroad to Morrisville, a short distance from Kelley's Ford on the Rappahannock.

The summer campaign now ended and we went into camp to remain a number of weeks. It was here that the boys had a story about the Colonel being lost one night while on picket duty. As the story ran it might be called "The adventures of a lost Colonel in Search of a Picket Line." It was dark, gloomy night, and in going to visit the line, it is supposed he made a slight mistake in direction, and in wandering through the woods became somewhat bewildered. Suddenly the boys on duty were startled by a loud strong voice crying through the darkness, "Ho! boys! Ho! boys!" The voice was at once recognized, and soon the "lost was found." Of course the wags of the regiment would try to get as much fun as possible out of the mishap, and for several days mysterious cries of "Ho! boys! Ho! boys!" were heard about the camp. They usually came from behind a tree, a tent or from some place of concealment where the eyes of officers could not penetrate.

In the month of September of this year—1863—began what has often been described as the "campaign of manoeuvres," and not until December did the army rest. Crossing the Rappahannock, we first pushed forward to the Rapidan—that narrow stream at many points only separating the picket lines. After remaining here for a week or ten days, we were relieved by a division of the 6th corps, and marched back to the neighborhood of Culpepper Court House. Lee was soon discovered to be moving on the flank of the army, and on the 13th of October we began the retrograde march to Bull Run and Centerville. On the morning of the 14th the enemy struck us at Auburn Mills or as the boys prefer to call it "Coffee Hill," and on the afternoon of the same day at Bristoe. It was a race to Bull Run and the Army of the Potomac won. Our friends of the other side followed up but did not push things to extremes, and there was no fighting. Cautiously they withdrew, destroying the railroad as they went, and it became our turn to follow. Forward again, and we were soon beyond the Rappahannock—making the fifth time that we crossed and recrossed that stream thus far in this campaign. On the 20th of November, we started across the Rapidan to Mine Run. Nothing came of the movement, and the morning of the 1st of December found us back on the Culpepper side of the river. In these manoeuvres no general engagement took place, but our marches and countermarches, by day and night, were still attended with great toil and many hardships. On the 7th we went into winter quarters near Stevensburg. Here we remained, with the exception of a day or two spent at Morton's Ford, on the Rapidan, where we made a demonstration in aid of a cavalry raid, until May, 1864. We were in comfortable cantonments and the winter passed pleasantly enough for soldiers. The regiment received an addition to its strength of 283 drafted men and substitutes in full of 1863. These, with men returned from the hospitals, gave us a regiment once more strong in numbers. The new men, aided by the old material, made rapid improvement in drill and discipline, so that when the campaign of 1864 opened, we flattered ourselves that the regiment was in a fine state of efficiency. "Colonel," said the general commanding the 2nd division of our corps, "you have a regiment there that I have always thought I would like to command. This is no militia about it." This to our Colonel we regarded as a handsome compliment. In the reorganization of the army we changed to the 4th brigade, our division and corps associations remaining the same.

May 3d, 1864, we broke camp and entered upon that series of fierce and bloody struggles which marked the way from the Rapidan to the James. We crossed the river at Ely's Ford on the morning of the 4th, and at noon of that day were at Chancellorsville, the scene of our first fight just one year before, where we bivouacked on the old battlefield. On the morning of the 5th we moved a few miles to the right and took position on the left of the line of battle in what is historic as the Battle of the Wilderness. In this grapple of giants we were fortunate enough to suffer no great loss. The 5th, 6th and 7th passed and we then followed in the flank movement to Spotsylvania, our corps keeping position along the Brock road until everything had passed. We spent one day at Tod's tavern and reached the Potomac on the 9th. In the action of the 10th the regiment was roughly handled and met with severe losses in killed, wounded and missing, the aggregate being about two hundred. On the 12th, in the famous and brilliant charge of the 2nd corps, the regiment was prominent and distinguished. The action began at early dawn, continued throughout most of the day, and cost us another large list of killed and wounded. The Lieutenant Colonel was among the wounded and was so unfortunate as to be taken prisoner. With that bravery and impetuosity so characteristic of him, he was last seen going over the captured breast works of the enemy, waving his sabre in the air and shouting, "Come on, boys! this is the last day of the rebellion!" and it might have been nearly so, had proper preparation been made to follow up the morning's work of the 2d corps. Among the killed of the 148th, in these operations, were Capt. Thompson Core, of Company K, Lieut. McGuire of Company I, and Lieut. James B. Cook of Company H. The latter was well known in Bellefonte, where he had many friends, as he also had in the regiment. Lieut. McGuire was a brave Irishman, who embodied all the inspirations of the robust, rugged soldier. He was uneducated, and yet an excellent drill master, seeming to know by instinct, as it were, all that was in the books and how to use it. It was a rare and enjoyable sight to see him exercising a company in the skirmish drill. The loss of Capt. Core was a grievous one and came unexpectedly from a wound in the arm. The wound was severe, though not at the time considered dangerous. Erysipolis supervened and caused his death. He was a large man, big hearted and good natured, and by his unfeigned kindness had endeared every one to him. He was also known in the regiment as a model of devotion to duty, always to be relied upon, under any circumstances, and never disappointing expectations. An instance of this may be given. One night while we were in bivouac on the banks of the Rappahannock, Capt. Core was on picket duty in charge of a detail from the regiment. In the morning we crossed the river and in the oversight the pickets were not relieved and were thus left behind. After we had proceeded a mile or more the oversight was discovered, and a discussion arose as to whether it was worth while to send back after them, some thinking that they might relieve themselves and follow of their own accord. The Colonel desired to know who was in command, and was informed that it was Capt. Core. "Then go back immediately and relieve him. Core will not leave without orders if he stays there until doomsday."

From the lines around Spottsylvania another flank movement was begun on the night of the 29th of May, and on the 23d we reached the north bank of the North Anna river only to find the enemy in position on the opposite side. On the 24th the 2nd corps crossed over and took up a position for assault. No general attack was made, however, and during the night of the 26th we withdrew. The movement back commenced at dark, but the skirmishers were not withdrawn until day began to dawn on the morning of the 27th. They were closely followed and some of the 148th made a narrow escape from capture. The turning movement was continued to the left, and after crossing the Pamunkey river near Hanover town, the enemy was again encountered in position at Cold Harbor, in front of the Chickahominy. This was on the 3d of June. An assault was gallantly made, but in the end it was not successful. Our division entered the enemy's works at one point, but being unsupported could not hold them, and was forced back a short distance. Here Lieut. Jacob S. Lander, of Company C, was killed. He was a gentle, amiable officer and was much lamented. The lines remained for some days in close contact and preparations were made for siege operations, but they were soon abandoned. It was then determined to move south of the James river, and Petersburg was reached on the 16th of June. In the operation around Petersburg the regiment was constantly engaged. It took part in the actions of the 10th, 18th and 22nd, experienced hard fighting and met with very serious losses. On the 22nd the flank of the division was turned and a considerable number of officers and men of the regiment were taken prisoners. Capt. Jacob B. Edmonds, of Company C, was killed, and Lieut. Wesley W. Bierly, of Company A, was mortally wounded. Lieut. Bierly fell into the hands of the enemy and died in Petersburg. The regiment was also engaged in the actions at Deep Bottom, July 28th, Strawberry Plains, August 14th, and Reams Station, August 25th. In the last action Lieut. David G. Ralston, another officer of Company C, was killed.

Upon the return of the regiment to the front at Petersburg, it was next, for some time, on duty at Fort Haskell and Steadman and battery No. 10, and in the early part of October changed its arms for the Spencer repeating rifles. It was one of the regiments selected by the corps commander to be thus armed, which was a compliment for past services and gallantry. On the night of the 27th of October a detail of 100 men of the 148th made an assault upon a fort in the enemy's line, and carried it, capturing part of a Virginia regiment. The prisoners were sent to the rear, but as the assaulting party was not supported the fort could not long be held, and in falling back a considerable number were killed and wounded. It was a brilliant feat of arms, and added to the reputation of the regiment, but it may be considered doubtful whether the gain compensated for the loss. Following this, the regiment did garrison duty in Forts Sampson, Gregg and Cummings.

We now come to the final campaign in the spring of 1865, which resulted in the fall of Petersburg and the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia at Appomattox. We find the 148th at Hatcher's Run, March 25th, where Lieut. Jeremiah A. Sankey, of Company F, was killed, and at Adams Farm, near Five Forks, on the 31st, where Capt. Samuel Everhart, of Company C, was killed. The fall of Capt. Everhart made the seventh officer of Company C, killed on the field of battle during its term of service. It seemed almost like fatality to be an officer of this Company, for its record in that respect is without example in the history of the Pennsylvania volunteers.

Lee, with the remnants of his army, was now in full retreat. The Army of the Potomac was close upon his heels, and at Sutherland's Station, on the Southside Railroad, the 148th did splendid work on the skirmish line. By a skillful and finely executed flank movement, which permitted an enflading fire with the repeating rifles, nearly an entire brigade was compelled to throw down its arms and surrender. For this the regiment was highly complimented by the general commanding the division in a splendid order. The results were 700 prisoners, 2 pieces of artillery and 2 flags. It participated in the final action at Farmville, on the 7th of April, and was present at the surrender at Appomattox, on the 9th. The end had come and the Army of the Potomac retraced its footsteps to the neighborhood of Alexandria passing, on the way, through the city of Richmond, so long the objective point of its operations. After taking part in the grand review at Washington, the 148th came to Harrisburg, where on the 3d day of June, 1865, it was "mustered out of service, and ceased to be, except as it lives in history and in the recollections of its many friends. It would not be proper to claim for the 148th a greater meed of praise than is due to any of its sister regiments, yet to its surviving members it is a matter of sincere and proud satisfaction that they can appeal to a record blurred by no spot or stain of dishonor, and look back to a career of service conscious that it never in any emergency failed to perform its full duty. I thank you, my friends for your kind attention.

An exchange expresses our likes and dislikes to a dot as follows: "We like to see a man refuse to take his local paper, and all the time sponge on his neighbor for the reading of it. We like to hear a man complain, when we ask him to subscribe for his home paper, that he takes more papers than he reads now, and then go around borrowing his neighbor's or loaf about until he has gathered all the news from it. We like to see a mechanic or merchant refuse to advertise in his home paper, and then try to get a share of the trade which the newspaper brings in town. But above all, we like to see one of our rich, miserly men who cannot pay $1.50 a year for his local paper always manage to be around in time to read the paper at the expense of a friend not worth a tenth part of what he himself is. It looks so economical, thrifty, and progressive."
