THE STAGE.

Mrs. Burke, Mr. Burke and W. E. Burton. Messrs. Editors.—This actress is fast assuming a prominent place in the public eye. The morning of her career has scarcely dawned, ere the seal of universal favor is set. We waver in our contemplation of her character, unsettled, whether to wonder and admire, most the model which Nature presents, in the bold, eccentric and grasping structure of her mind, or the unerring indicia of mental cultivation and accomplishments, earned by severe application. We do not mean to claim for her that she is a prodigy—that she bursts upon the world like a meteor, to astonish and bewilder, by her erratic course; but that she is gifted by nature with an intuitive perception of human character; grasps its striking features, incorporates and gives them expression suited to the various states of the soul. Joined to an unaffected, feminine modesty and an undeviating propriety of demeanor, she shares largely in the peculiarity of bold and startling conceptions. Obstacles which sometimes swerve the purpose of stout hearts, only serve in her to give new zest to exertion. The proud current of the aspirations of such a mind, once set, overleaps all confines interposed to change its direction or fetter its progress—they are but mole-hills, to be wasted away by its resistless course—for she knows well, that whoever accomplishes great results

"Should have her soul's affections all absorbed in one majestic purpose."

and then, as a matter of course, she will

"To its fulfillment, as a mountain borne on mighty stream, with all its vessel's rills, sweep proudly to the ocean, pausing not to daily with the flowers."

The strong points in her scenic representations, are no sooner presented than they are seized by the mind, on account of their inimitable conformity to nature. The high and commanding excellence in Mrs. Burke's acting consists in the perfect conception she has of the character she impersonates, and the extraordinary power she possesses to collect and throw into it the peculiar feeling, tone, manner and energy, necessary to ensure its assumption; the vividness and sublime effect of reality. The poet has embodied the secret in three lines:

"She puts so much of her heart into her act, That her example has a magnet's force."

And all are swift to follow, whom all love."

There is a school of philosophers, justly denominated levelers, who, by some metaphysical process, account for the possession and pre-eminence of exercise of this power, as the natural result and need of strenuous toil. But, to be able to read human character, to give utterance to the thoughts, aspirations and emotions, as they existed and swayed the breasts of others, is the sublime gift and endowment of Heaven. This power is pre-eminently Mrs. Burke's. So numerous, bright and imperishable are the evidences of the eminent rank she occupies among the Stars of the Stage, springing from the natural bestowment of this rare faculty, that we need not summon up the spirit of destiny to know the place which will be assigned her. The true test of merit, in this particular, is observation. With this criterion—if we take the effect produced upon an audience by the representation of certain characters as their sense and estimate of the approximation to real scenes and existences—we shall arrive at safe conclusions. By this rule, what judgment will be formed of Mrs. Burke's recent impersonation in our city of the character of Queen Elizabeth, in Richard III? where the will of every soul is stirred and troubled in its lowest depths—where the free, warm, lively gush of sympathy breaks loose from the bosoms of hundreds, and is struggling with the distracted and frantic Elizabeth for the deliverance of her doomed children.

Who, present on that occasion, will, while a glimmering ray of reason lights up the soul, forget her inimitable action in that death-like from her two sons—her fond and dear-bought embrace of the one—and the other—her burning kisses, imprinted for the last time—the painful violence of her grief and anguish, parting for vent—but which, at length, becomes insupportable, and she relapses into a swoon and is borne off the stage. It was a masterly stroke of conception, such as we have never seen equalled; and, we believe, cannot be excelled. Indeed, were the pleasing duty assigned us of awarding laurels, as the signet of merit, to form a brilliant coronet around the brow of her who most deserved it, for her true and faithful delineation of this character, we should place it upon the head of Mrs. Burke. In the character of Pauline, in the Lady of Lyons; of Ophelia, in Hamlet; of Clara, in Money; of Mrs. Haller, in the Stranger; of Miami, in Buckstone's Green Buses; of Theresia, in the Orphan of Geneva—the highest encomiums are due her—but emphatically so, in the character of Susan, in Black-Eyed Susan. Every scene becomes touchingly interesting and impressive, up to the moment she is informed of the doom that awaits her husband, whose protection of her from the shameless violence of the dissolute Captain, becomes his death warrant. At this instant, hearing his sentence, she rushes into her husband's arms, uttering a wild shriek. The scene stirs every chord of the soul—it throbs intensely and painfully, subduing and melting to tears, without respect to sex or age. The demonstrations of approbation are said to proceed uniformly from the weak and sensitive—such was not the fact during Mrs. Burke's late engagement here—for, on the occasion of her benefit, and also Mr. Anderson's, the audiences were unusually large, and embraced the elite of the city—and the signs of a signal and universal approbation of superior abilities were never more palpable and marked.

In taking leave of this actress—for we have already exceeded the limits we had prescribed to ourselves—we ask, when united with this strong combination of pre-eminent, native talent and shining acquirements, there is super-added the precees and crowning gem of private worth, which shrinks from no fair scrutiny—what successful barrier can be thrown across her pathway to the proud pinnacle of Fame's strown, as that pathway already is, with garlands, beautifully emblematic of golden opinions won by merit.

Mr. Burke is a "handle of oddities," closely packed and containing an exhaustless fund of rare humor. In his composition Nature has displayed a singular freak. Qualities dissimilar in themselves, opposite, and even irreconcilable, as entering into the constituent elements of the same character, strike us at every turn, and we are constrained to admit, that he lives, thinks and feels in a world of his own creation. He unsettles our judgment of him derived from our habits of thinking, and frustrates our efforts to discover the bond of fellow feeling which links him to us. The test of the physiognomist fails in its application to him. As Shakespeare hath said—

"There is no art To find the mind's construction in the face."

His demure and heavy look bespeaks any thing but buoyancy of spirits and quick perception—whereas a constant, flowing vein of humor and mirthfulness is his most striking peculiarity. An instinctive aversion to follow in the leading-strings of other minds, is deep and natural. Eccentric himself, his mind goes forth in pursuit of objects possessing affinity with it. His forte is comedy—and Nature seems to have cut him out expressly for a comedian. His cast of countenance, tone of voice, capricious manner and habitual carelessness, dispose us to merriment, without affording us the key to conduct us to the spring of the propensity which they excite. Burke is, in fact, an odd link in the chain of human sympathy. His eccentricities, sharpened by their associations with kindred peculiarities in others, have impressed themselves, with a transforming influence, upon the tenor of his feelings. In the character of a comedian, representing oddities in high and low life, he stands deservedly high. It is currently reported, that Mr. Burton has made engagements of a permanent nature with Mr. and Mrs. Burke—we could wish him no greater or more valuable acquisition. Mr. Burton has made many a good hit on the stage, but this is the crowning hit off the stage.

GEN. JACKSON A MARYLANDER BY BIRTH. The Cecil Whig claims that General Jackson was born in that county. The Whig says: "The prevailing opinion among the last generation of inhabitants around about the village of Turkeytown in this county, was that he was born near that place. Of the following facts, there is no doubt. An Irish emigrant, named Jackson, with his wife and two sons, small children, immediately from Ireland, settled near Turkeytown, Cecil county, Md., and remained there about a year. While there, another son whom they named Andrew, was born, and the date of his birth answered to the time of the birth of General Jackson. About that time there was a tide of emigration from this county, to the country known as the Waxhaw settlement—to the neighborhood of Charlotte, in Mecklenburg Co., N. C.,—and to the section of country lying adjacent thereto on the line between North and South Carolina, which line had not then been determined and laid down. With these emigrants went the Irishman Jackson and his family, his son Andrew, then quite a child, among the rest. The circumstances detailed above led many of our citizens within whose knowledge they transpired, but who have since passed away, to entertain the firm belief that this boy Andrew Jackson, is the same individual who afterwards became General Jackson, and President of the United States, and whose death is now mourned throughout the length and breadth of the country."

(Correspondence of the American Republican.)

MARSEILLES, May 15, 1845.

Being a reader of your valuable paper, the principles of which appear patriotic, and your desire to promote the American interest induces me to make a few statements for the benefit of the commercial part of the community of the United States. For some years past, the commerce between this and the United States has been carried on universally by the Americans, but within the last 3 or 4 years it has all gone into the hands of the Swedes, Danes and Norwegians; those nations having the facilities of carrying the produce of France to the United States, and the goods being subject to no more duties than if carried by an American; the very low rate of wages they pay their crews, and the trifling expense at which they sail their vessels, give them every advantage over Americans in carrying freight. That, together with the negligence of the American custom-houses in not exacting certificates of growth of articles shipped from here, more than half of which are produce of other countries, enables shippers to send goods by them at rates that it would be impossible for Americans to take them at. Unless the American government take some measures to protect the interests of American ship owners, it will be folly for them to send their vessels here, as they never can compete with the vessels of the nations I have mentioned.—Should there be a quantity of goods to ship from here to the States, shippers may offer them to an American, but if asked a piece of freight that will merely pay his expenses, their general observation is, that they can get a Swede, a Dane or a Norwegian to take them less—the consequence is, one gets loaded and the other has to leave in ballast. This is the state of things here now, and it ought to be made known.

If you think this statement worthy a place in your paper, please publish it. Very respectfully, P. M.

VIOLENCE OF THE WIND. During the gale on the night of Sunday week says the Howard District Press, a young Hickory tree in full vigor in the garden of Mrs. Ellicott, was entirely twisted off at the trunk. The tree having been planted by Mr. George Ellicott and father on the day of Gen. Jackson's election to the presidency, it is considered somewhat remarkable that it should be so suddenly destroyed on the night of his decease.

SECRET DISEASE

CURED IN FROM 1 TO 3 DAYS or 20 CHARGES. Apply DR. JOHNSON'S of the LOCK HOSPITAL, North Frederick street, Two Doors from Baltimore street, where may be obtained the most speedy remedy for Gonorrhoea, Gleet, Stricture, Seminal Weakness, pain in the Loins, &c. Stiffness of the Kidneys, and every other Lues, &c. A CERTAIN DISEASE. How terrible is even the contemplation of the ravages of this disease, when from neglect to consult a skilful physician, or from ignorance and improper treatment, the constitutional symptoms make their appearance—the throat becomes ulcerated, the nose diseased, nocturnal pains in the head and limbs, dimness of sight, deafness, the bones affected, blotches on the head, face and extremities, progressing on with frightful rapidity till at last the points of the mouth is destroyed, the bones of the nose decay and fall in; the victims of this horrid disease become an object of pity, until the last scene of the drama winds up and death drops the curtain by carrying the unhappy patient to an untimely tomb.

TAKE PARTICULAR NOTICE. Those whose constitutions have been injured by a certain pernicious practice may be soon restored to perfect health by applying to Dr. Johnson, either personally or by letter. Dr. J. has seen cases that were sufficient to appal the heart and harrow up the soul of all who were not used to the observation of such terrible sights.

Should this meet the eye of any who are suffering from the above affection, let them fly immediately to Dr. Johnson, who stands ready to relieve them and from his extensive practice in the first Hospitals of Europe and America, he guarantees a speedy cure, no matter how long the case may be.

It is proper here to observe that Dr. JOHNSON is not at present engaged in the practice of medicine through pecuniary necessity—he having, by the decrease of a relative, fallen heir to a fortune—had that inheritance he would devote to benefit mankind, to pour like the good Samaritan, oil into their wounds, and particularly to relieve those who suffer from a disease for which the world feels no pity.—As it is not to be remembered that the object of Dr. Johnson in offering his services for the relief of the misery of mankind, is not through pecuniary necessity. Hence no charge, unless in any case be made unless the Patient is cured.

SURGICAL OPERATIONS on the Eye, such as for Squinting, Cataract, &c. Also those for Deformity of the Limb, such as Club Foot, &c., performed on the Point of Cure.
