NUMBER 31.

VOLUME XXXVI.

DOUBLE PREMIUM OFFER. ECLECTIC MONTHLY. New Inducement!

Artistic Attraction!

THE two match PAILOREDENTS will be sent, postage paid, after this date, to each new subscriber to the Eclectic Magazine who sends his name and $5 in advance.

1. RETURNED FROM MARKET, is a beautiful engraving by John Sartain. The market has returned from the town, bearing a rich freight of purchases to the delighted young people, who are receiving them with eagerness. The whole family are assembled on or in front of the Piazza, which, with the Mansion, appears almost exactly like the Mount Vernon home of Washington, with the old gentleman seated, and adjusting his glasses to read the paper, who looks like Washington himself. The whole scene in the large engraving is attractive and beautiful, and worth a place on the parlor walls.

2. The match print is FILIAL AFFECTION, or SUNDAY MORNING, also engraved by John Sartain, at a cost of twelve hundred dollars for both of them. Sartain's price was $5 for the two match prints. The scene in this print is at the family home, and the view through the open gate presents the village church in the distance, with its spire pointing heavenward, and a beautiful girl of some twenty summers waits, Bible in hand, by the gate, just departing for worship in the village sanctuary. The mother, still handsome, attends the aged grandfather, with the children, the house dog, and the donkey, make up the family group, just departing for worship in the village sanctuary. Both are beautiful match prints, easily obtained in this manner.

3. A large and fine portrait of the Hon. Edward Everett will be sent in place of either print, as a premium, postage paid, as may be preferred.

4. The January number of the Eclectic is embellished with double lithographic plates, with treasures of literature, and a fine portrait of the Hon. Edward Everett.

5. The February number plate has five portraits of eminent men.

6. The March number plate is a print of Napoleon I. at the battle of Austerlitz.

7. Three superior plates are in the hands of the artist for future numbers.

Now is a good time to subscribe.

Harvest Time.

BY FREDERICK J. WATTS.

The ripening grain, like ocean's roll
When fearful storm prevails, Bends to the murmuring wind's control,
And gayly sports the gale.

It stands matured in nature's mould
With head erect and high,
And garbed in dress of brightest gold Points upwards to the sky.

Bright emblem of the life of man,
It blooms but to decay,
At most its stay is but a span And early fades away.

Like all the verdure of the earth,
'Tis withered by the sun,
The very beams that gave it birth,
By them it is undone.

Best is the thought that bounteous
God Refuses not to give From out his store in Nature's sod
The germ for man to live.

Refuses not to rich or poor,
The fruits they would obtain;
He gives from His abundant store
To all who praise His name.

Alike to all who pray and weep,
His blessings here are given;
The good we sow, ten-fold we'll reap
In Harvest Time in Heaven.

Miscellaneous.

THE POETS ON HOME.

BY F. S. C.

Home! What spot on earth so hallowed and sacred to our hearts as home!
How inseparable from all our earthly happiness is the very idea of it! With what glowing warmth does humanity's universal heart respond to the sentiment so tenderly and beautifully expressed in the lines of Papey:

"Mid pleasures and palaces tho' we may Roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home!"

Home is a necessity to man's very nature. He has been put up on the home-model. He has a heart; therefore he must have objects on which to lavish the wealth of his affections; and these only are to be found in the little world of home. The man whose spirit does not instinctively accord the attractiveness and sacredness of the very idea of home, has fallen below the dignity of a rational and social intelligence. Such a man needs no home, because he wants a heart.

Copper seems to have derived exquisite pleasure from the reflection that all had not been lost in the fall; for he ex-claims with evident emotion,—

"Domestic happiness! thou only bliss
Of Paradise that has survived the fall!
Though few now taste thee unimpaired and free!"

Thompson, in his Seasons, draws a very natural and life-like picture of a true home; his grouping together of the family is one of the most felicitous strokes of his descriptive genius. Of how many homes of which we wot is this representation a faithful type! Here it is:

"The touch of kindred too and love he feels;
The modest eye, whose beams on his alone Elastic shine; the little strong embrace Of prattling children, twined around his neck.

And smiling to please him, calling forth
The fond paternal soul who fret in guilt,
This is the life which those who fret in guilt,
And guilty cities, never know; the life,
Led by primeval ages, uncorrupt, When angels dwelt; and God himself, with man!"

There is more than elegant, harmonious versification in the following lines of Montgomery; there is a sentiment in them which speaks to every heart, and touches a cord of sympathetic emotion in every soul. Who does not love and revere the memory of this good poet for writing them?

"Man, through all ages of revolving time, Unchanging man, in every varying clime,
Deems his own land of every land the pride, Beloved of heaven over all the world beside;
His home the spot of earth supremely blest,
A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest."

Everything about home has its peculiar association of interest to the memory and heart. Things in themselves small and trivial, belong to the very idea. Without them, each in its place home would not be home in the natural life-like sense of the word. Goldsmith in his picture of a rural home, humor-ously gets off the following, and surely there are but few who have not at times had just such a scene of the past re-touching by memory:

"Around, in sympathetic mirth,
'Tis tricks the kitten tries;
The cricket chirrup on the hearth,
The crackling fagot flies."

"'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark Bay deep-mouthed welcome as we draw near home;

'Tis sweet to know there is an eye will mark Our coming, and look brighter when we come."

The physical world, just outside of the charmed circle of home, is a necessity to the effect of the scene. The immediate surroundings of the spot of our birth and childhood attach to the memory; they are too hallowed in our hearts ever to be obliterated from memory.— Every object about that shrine of our childhood has an association, a tale, or a memory, that we love to linger fresh and green about our hearts. This idea is most fittingly expressed by Woodworth in these words:

"How dear to this heart are the scenes of my childhood,
When fond recollection recall them to view;
The orchard, the meadow, the deep-tangled wild-wood,
And every loved spot which infancy knew."

Heaven designed that Home should be a cherished spot; and man would be untrue to all the higher and nobler instincts of his nature, if it were not so.

The last passion which grows cold in the human breast is the love of kindred and home. Even the savage, dead to sympathy as is his heart for the white man, cherishes an idolatrous reverence for his hunting-grounds and graves of his forefathers. This sacred principle of veneration for home and its cherished objects runs all through the lower and higher grades of society. It obtains as much in the humble cottage of the poor and unlettered, as in the splendid mansions of the opulent and the great.

And why should it not be so? It was there we were born; there we spent the days and mingled in the well-remembered scenes of our childhood. With such holy and hallowing memories attaching to that sacred place, why should we not love and cherish it? Why should not mellowing, soul-touching influences play around our hearts, when

"Fond memory brings the light Of other days around us."

The sentiment is universally received, that "there's no place like home." We conclude our extracts from the poets on home, by giving the beautiful touches of an anonymous bard upon this subject:

"I've wandered through many a clime where flowers of beauty grew—Where all was blissful to the heart and lovely to the view;
I've seen them in their twilight pride and in their dress of morn, But none appeared so sweet to me as the spot where I was born."
