

THE DEPARTMENT CLEVER'S SOLILOQUY.

BY EDWARD R. D. MAYNE.

I have been in the Government employ since sixty-one—when I was but a boy: A greenhorn lad who lacked experience true. The world and politics alike were new. Then Civil War with ruthless withering hand Cast its dread shadow on this fruitful land. At least that portion where the dogs of war Were loosed and savaged with insatiable maw.

And in my innocence I heard the din, And drew my pay and let the great world spin, While older heads than mine spoke thus to me: "Republicans are, so you must be. I bowed and silently watched the fight: The Union conquered, and in Victory's light I saw, or thought I saw, the hand of God In judgment swaying the avenging rod.

So when the foe was conquered and subdued, Then was my soul with anxious thought imbued By my instructors, who with ardent keen Warned me of dangers, lest I should be seen Thwarting every woman, child or man, Whose politics were not Republican. And time rolled on with overbearing stride Until November came and changed the tide.

Then many and many a man lost many a hat, Then many and many a man lost many a seat, And so I took my conscience, "What an art! My office training bids me scorn to lie. I believe the way that I was taught. At noon and think was never what it ought To be, and always gave me constant pain, And on my nerves has been a mighty strain.

And now conviction stares me in the face That old ideas are really out of place, And ever since the last election day My politics have been the other way. 'Tis true I voted then straight out for Blaine, But I know myself I won't again. For after self-communion I say that That at this writing I'm a Democrat.

—Washington Republic, Washington, Nov. 28, 1884.

A RUNAWAY.

"Your Aunt Carleton and Cousin Jennie will be here on the next train, Russell," said Mr. Wilder to his nephew. "You had better take the pony chaise and bring them from the depot."

"Can't. Am going away myself, sir," "The deuce you are!" responded the old gentleman, pushing his spectacles up over his forehead, and regarding his nephew with an air of surprised consternation.

"Yes, sir. Charles Hunt invited me out to his place for a few weeks, and I thought that I might as well go now as any time."

"I should say that it was a very strange time to be leaving home; your aunt and cousin will consider it as a personal affront, sir!"

"It is not intended as such, sir. Though to be frank, considering the object of Cousin Jennie's visit, I prefer not to see her. And I must say that I think she would have shown more sense and delicacy if she had stayed away."

"Your cousin is a very lovely girl, Mr. Impudence, and won't be likely to go begging."

"I don't doubt it in the least. But for all that she won't suit me for a wife, uncle."

"How do you know that, you conceited young dandy when you have never seen her?" inquired the irate old man.

"Common sense teaches me that no marriage can be a happy one that does not spring from mutual love. And one thing I am resolved that I will never marry from mercenary motives."

"Nobody wants you to marry the girl unless you like her!" roared Mr. Wilder, his face growing purple with vexation. "All I ask is that you will stay and see her. And I insist upon it!"

"I am sorry to disoblige you, uncle; but if I should stay it would only give rise to conclusion that I am anxious to avoid. But I will relinquish all claim to the property that you are so anxious to see divided. As that seems to be the main object I think that I ought to be satisfied."

A few minutes later Russell passed by the window, valise in hand. He nodded good-humoredly to his uncle as he glanced in, who glared after him in speechless rage. "He shan't have a penny—not a penny!" he growled.

"What's the matter now?" said the gentle voice of his wife Polly, who had just entered.

"Matter enough. Russell has gone—actually cleared out so as not to see his cousin. What'd you think of that?"

"I think you'd have another attack of the gout if you get yourself excited," said the good lady, as she turned to her knitting. "If Russell and Jennie had seen each other before they had any notion that you wanted them to marry, ten to one but what they would have fallen head and ears in love with each other; but as matters are now I don't believe it would be of the least use. From what Ellen wrote me I should think Jennie to be as much opposed to it as Russell. She says that she can't bear to hear his name mentioned, and that it was as much as she could do to get her to consent to come at all when she heard that Russell was home."

"They are a couple of simpletons," said the old gentleman. "I've got a half a mind to make another will and leave my property to some charitable institution."

In going to Dighton, whether he was bound, Russell Wilder had to travel part of the way by stage. There was only one passenger beside himself—a lady. He noticed particularly the daintily gloved hands and well-fitting boots. Her graceful form indicated that she was both young and pretty, but he could not see her face on account of the veil that hid it.

The sudden starting of the coach, which sent some of the lady's parcels from the seat to the floor, gave Russell an opportunity of speaking when he returned them.

From this they fell easily into conversation, and it was curious how sociable they became. The lady, who Russell thought her companion to be the most interesting and agreeable man she ever met with. And as for Russell, he often lost the thread of his discourse in admiring the red, dimpled mouth, and the pretty teeth there disclosed whenever she spoke or smiled.

"Where do you want to be left, sir?" inquired the coachman, as they entered the village.

"At Mr. Charles Hunt's, Locust Hill."

"Why, there's where I am going," said the lady, opening her eyes widely. "Nellie, Mr. Hunt's wife, is my most particular friend; we used to go to school together."

"My step-mamma, you know, was going to Uncle Wilder, and she insisted on my going along with her to see the hateful, disagreeable prig of a cousin of mine that they are determined to marry me to. So, when mamma was busy packing, I just put on my things and slipped off, leaving a note to tell where I was going. Wasn't it a good joke on them all?"

"I should think it was," said Nellie, with a burst of merriment far more than the occasion warranted. "When I saw you and your companion was I thought you were out on your wedding tour?"

"No, indeed; never saw the man until he got into the stage at P— But, really, he is the finest-looking man I ever saw, and so agreeable. Who is he?"

"Oh, I'll introduce you when you come down stairs. You'll have only time to dress. Mind and look your prettiest!"

If Jennie did not "look her prettiest," she certainly looked very lovely as she entered the supper room, her linen suit exchanged for a fresh soft muslin, whose simplicity and purity were relieved only by the violet-colored ribbons in her hair and at her throat. Russell had also taken great pains with his toilet. The pause that followed Jennie's entrance was broken by Mr. Hunt, who, in response to a meaning glance from his wife, said: "Russell, allow me to introduce you to your cousin Jennie, Miss Carlson, your cousin, Russell Wilder."

The embarrassment which followed the blank astonishment into which this announcement threw the parties so unexpectedly made known to each other was quickly dispelled by the turn that was given it by their host and hostess.

"I suppose you'll want to book yourself for the next stage," said Mr. Hunt, slyly, to Russell, who had been taken into his friend's confidence. "And you," said his wife, turning to Jennie, "I don't suppose anything could tempt you to remain, now that you have that hateful, disagreeable—"

"Nellie!" interrupted Jennie, crimsoning, as she remembered her words.

"Well, won't then. But you must let me laugh. Just to think of you running away from each other and running in the same direction, and to the same place!" The ringing laugh that burst from Nellie's lips was too contagious to be resisted even by those at whose expense it was raised.

"I need hardly say that Russell did not take his seat until morning, nor did Jennie seem at all disposed to cut short her visit on account of her cousin's unexpected appearance. When they did go they went as they came—together. Mr. Wilder's astonishment was only equalled by his delight, on looking out of the window to see the two walking up the path toward the house, arm and arm, and apparently in the best of terms. As for Russell and Jennie, they seemed to regard this expected meeting as their "manifest destiny," accepting it as such, much to the joy of their uncle, whose darling wish was accomplished in the marriage of the two, thus made happy in spite of themselves.

TINGED WITH ROMANCE.

A Wedding at Reading Which Resurrects Some Old Events.

READING, Pa., Dec. 31.—The Reading papers contain an announcement of the marriage of Miss Catharine Clubb, of this city, and Franklyn Herdman, of New York, formerly of Reading. The bride is the only daughter of a retired merchant, reported to be worth $150,000. She is thirty-two years old and in her time has had many admirers.

Herdman has been absent from Reading for seven years. Twelve years ago he was accused of assaulting the late Daniel S. Francis, afterward editor of the Daily Spirit of Berks, for which he served five years in jail here. After his release he disappeared and located in New York. Several weeks ago he suddenly appeared in Reading. Miss Clubb was an old-time acquaintance of his, and it is stated the two have been in correspondence since his return.

Last Friday evening they were driven in a closed cab through the snow storm to the parsonage of Rev. Dr. McCauley, who made them one.

Their marriage has leaked out to day, and has caused quite a flutter among those who knew him years ago. Herdman was congratulated in his good luck in having obtained a wealthy wife. He says he will take her with him to New York in a few days. His bride is best remembered in connection with an episode by which her father lost $20,000 some years ago. He discovered that some non-registered, negotiable bonds were missing from his safe. He supposed he had been robbed and offered a reward for their return. It next leaked out that Miss Clubb had placed them in the hands of a male acquaintance, in whom she had the utmost confidence, to negotiate a small loan to help him out. This friend decamped with the bonds, and all further proceedings were dropped. He died in the Joliet (Ill.) penitentiary shortly afterward. His name was John Miller.

AN UNDERTAKER'S TERROR.

The Body of a Young Woman Gets Out of His Wagon on Its Way for Dissection.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 31.—On Saturday night about 8 o'clock the corpse of a young woman wrapped only in a sheet was found lying in the middle of the road at Seventeenth and Morgan streets. The only clue to identity was a scrap of paper with the words "Mary Dalton" written upon it. The case excited the greatest curiosity. On Sunday afternoon Dr. Baer, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, called at the Coroner's office and explained that the body was that of Mary Dalton, who had died at the Female Hospital and had been assigned to his college by the city authorities. It had been accidentally dropped out of the undertaker's wagon on its way to the college. The driver of the wagon, when he found his load had disappeared, was too frightened to look for it. The body was delivered to the college authorities.

A Boy's Glittering Find.

LANCASTER, Pa., Dec. 31.—Information has just reached this city of an excitement prevailing in the lower end of the county over the discovery made by a boy while digging for a skunk. About two feet below the surface of the earth the lad came upon a bright, glittering mineral, a lump of which he snatched and carried home to his father.

The father took it to two miners who had at one time mined in California, and they unhesitatingly pronounced it gold. Scientific men, to whom the matter has been referred, discredit the idea of gold existing as a product of Lancaster County, but the miners who examined the specimen stake their practical knowledge against that of theoretical mineralogists and scientists generally.

Father and son persistently refuse to disclose the place where the mineral—whatever it is—was found, but it is believed to have been discovered on a farm in Fulton Township, and the people of that section are greatly exercised about it.

Piano Patent Infringement.

BOSTON, Dec. 31.—Jacob Greener, of Elmira, N. Y., claims he holds a patent for the mechanism known as the "soft pedal" in piano fortes, and has notified all piano manufacturers that he will hold them responsible for infringement.

responsible for infringement. He has brought suit against Chickering & Sons, of this city. The matter affects very large interests. Greener virtually claiming royalty on every instrument made.

A LIGHTNING-LIKE WEDDING.

A Southern Conductor Holds His Trois, Proposes and is Married, All in Five Minutes.

AMERICA, Ga., Dec. 31.—The unexpected marriage of Miss Georgia Laramore, of this city, to Ward Holt, conductor on the Southern Railway, has created quite a sensation. Mr. Holt being aware that Miss Laramore was to marry a prominent Macon merchant in a day or two stopped as an actor the hotel veranda where she was standing with a letter in her hand and congratulated her. Holding up the letter she said:

"Do you see this? It is a request for a postponement which I have granted."

"Why?" replied the conductor, whose train was now ready to leave. "I would not have agreed to that. If he is not ready I am, and you know I love you. Will you marry me?"

The answer was yes. The conductor delayed his train, procured his license, and in less than ten minutes it takes to tell the two were made one. Five minutes later the conductor was whirling off with his train.

Died Suddenly—Fond With His Throat Cut.

Special to the Sentinel.

CRAWFORDVILLE, Ind., Dec. 30.—This morning at 10 o'clock Hon. Archibald Johnston died at his residence on East Main street. Mr. Johnston has only been sick two days, and his death was unexpected. He was fifty-five years old and leaves a large circle of friends and relatives to mourn his death.

He was one of the pioneers of this State, and has lived in this county eighteen years. He was a prominent Democrat, and has always been active in politics, having represented this county, and was elected State Senator in 1869. His many friends throughout the State will be pained to hear of his death.

William Cox, a married man who resides just south of Lexington, in this county, was found in his barn this morning with his throat cut and a bloody razor near him. He was in an unconscious condition. After he was aroused he claimed he had been attacked by an unknown man, but this is not believed. It is thought he attempted suicide and failed.

The Hooking Valley Trouble.

COLLIER, O., Dec. 31.—Officers of the Hooking Valley Railway and Coal Exchange report everything quiet in the valley this morning, though they express the opinion that there will be some trouble to night. They say the demonstration last night failed to take an active form for the reason that the strikers were met with such a strong force of guards where they expected to make an attack. They consider the unusual demonstrations at the time as an effort to keep the miners from breaking from their ranks and going to work, as many of them have decided to do. Early this morning several shots were fired at Happy Hollow, but without damage, and this was the extent of the outward demonstration on the part of the unlawful element.

Snow Storm in the West.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 31.—It snowed heavily all night, and is drifting badly. The wind is blowing at a velocity of twenty miles per hour, and the indications point to great delay of trains on all the roads in this State and Dakota.

CORRAL BLUFFS, Iowa, Dec. 31.—The severest snow storm of the season set in yesterday, and continued unabated. A strong wind is blowing from the southwest and the snow is drifting. Railroad travel is delayed.

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 31.—Another severe storm is reported from several points in the mountains, with extremely low temperatures, and a prospect that the Marshall Pass will again be closed to trains.

The Change of Weather.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 31.—After two days of rain and high temperature, another cold change set in early this morning, and the mercury has tumbled from 65 yesterday to 20 at 1 p. m. today, with a prospect that it will go close to zero. The rainfall in this section was quite heavy, and caused all the creeks and small rivers to rise rapidly and high many of them overflowing their banks, and a good deal of damage has been done to farmers, bridges and other property. The railroads also suffered from washouts, but the delay to the trains has not been serious, and as the low water has now been checked by the cold weather, repairs will be made and the normal condition of things resumed.

Prohibition Conference.

CHICAGO, Dec. 31.—A meeting of the National Committee of the Prohibition party and conference of leading workers will be held here Friday night and Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. Headquarters will be at the Murray Hill Hotel; the meeting will be at Rev. Stephen Merritt's church.

A Cooking Main.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—A cooking main took place near Flushing, L. I., last night, between Long Island and New Jersey birds for $1,000 a side, or $100 a side. Eight battles were fought, New Jersey winning five. It is estimated that over $10,000 changed hands.

Catarh is a disease so prevalent and of such a distressing and frequently dangerous nature it is not to be wondered that public cures are constantly submitted to public notice. The good old remedy, Pond's Extract, tested for forty years of the people's approval, stands, however, pre-eminent as specific for this complaint. Pond's Extract Catarh Remedy (75 cents) is specially prepared for acute and sensitive cases. Their Nasal Syringe (25 cents) forms a very efficient mode of application. Procure them from your druggist.

Fatal Jealousy.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 31.—Dan Jewel, a colored weaver worst peddler, twenty-two years old, shot his fifteen-year-old wife, Lizzie, in the head, inflicting a probably fatal wound. Jealousy.

Strong language is oftentimes ineffective as well as indecous, but the language of Mrs. Thomas Strong, of Bangor, Me., is so explicit as to leave no doubt of its truth. The lady writes: "I found Mischler's Herb Bitters the best remedy I could desire for nausea and vomiting." Persons who have tried the Bitters for dyspepsia, liver complaint, kidney disease, indigestion, stomach disorders and nervous complaints are equally emphatic and unequivocal in attesting the wonderful curative properties of the medicine.

New York's Corn Corner.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—The corn market still continues. Prices went up two cents this morning.
