ARCHDUCHESS AT THE FRONT.

Daughter of Austrian Commander in Chief Heads Red Cross Corps. Vienna.—The Archduchess Isabella, daughter of Archduke Frederick, commander in chief of the Austrian forces, is now seeing actual service at the battle front. She is head of one of the Austrian Red Cross corps and spends a great deal of time at her father's headquarters. The Austrian Red Cross is an admirably organized body of workers and is carrying on its humane work in a quiet but very effective manner. Archduke Frederick has been one of the most conspicuous figures in the war. He has been directing the operations against both the Russians and Italians and is now confronted by another emergency, the possible entrance of Rumania into the war on the side of the allies. It is stated that the Rumanian army consists of 1,000,000 well trained and well armed men, who will be stationed along a 600 mile front in event of her participation in hostilities.

BIGGEST WARSHIP NEARLY COMPLETE

Arizona, Just Launched, Has So Far Cost $7,425,000.

TOTAL TO REACH $16,000,000

Uncle Sam's Newest Dreadnought Carries Twelve Fourteen-inch Guns and Twenty-two Five-inch Rifles. Is the Thirty-ninth Warship Built For American Navy Since 1892.

Washington.—The thirty-ninth battleship built for the American navy since 1892 took the water when the super-Dreadnought Arizona slipped from the ways of the New York navy yard. Compared to the first American battleship, the Indiana, launched in 1893, the Arizona is nearly twice as long, half again as wide and of three times as great displacement. Against the Indiana's four thirteen-inch guns and eight eight-inch the Arizona will carry twelve fourteen-inch and twenty-two five-inch rifles, the same armament as her sister ship, the Pennsylvania, that was recently launched at Newport News.

The Indiana's thirteen inch guns were identical with those aboard the famous old Oregon, which played their part in the battle of Santiago.

With the fourteens of the Arizona in her turrets, the Oregon could have halted any one of the fleeing Spanish ships almost without leaving her station. The Arizona's guns have a range, even at the low elevation of American navy mountings, of fifteen miles or more against eight or nine miles for the old thirteens.

The Arizona is the fourth battleship built by the United States in its own navy yard at New York. The others were the Connecticut, the Dreadnought Florida and the super-Dreadnought New York, at present one of the largest, swiftest and most powerful of American fighting craft. Against the New York's displacement of 27,000 tons, however, the Arizona displaces 31,400 tons and measures 600 feet in length and ninety-seven feet six inches in width. She will mount twelve fourteen-inch guns to the ten fourteens carried by the Texas, and they will be carried three to a turret, as aboard the Pennsylvania.

Immediately the keel of the navy department's greatest experiment in naval construction, the electrically driven super-Dreadnought California, will be laid at the New York navy yard.

She will be nearly 1,000 tons heavier than the Arizona, although carrying the same equipment and arrangement of guns, but is expected to develop a greater speed than the twenty-one knots desired of the Arizona.

Comparing the most recent government built battleship to the first turned out, navy officials point to the fact that although the Arizona has twelve guns to the Connecticut's four and displaces 15,400 tons more water, being nearly twice as large, she will carry only 915 men as against the 1,012 men who are needed to handle the smaller ship.

This is due to the improvement in mechanical appliances for battleships in the last decade and also to the fact that oil has been substituted for coal as fuel, decreasing the necessary fire room force and that only two sizes of guns compose her armament against the four sizes aboard the Connecticut.

The Arizona was sponsored by Miss Esther Ross of Prescott, Ariz., nominated by Governor Hunt of Arizona. As she lies in the water today the ship has cost the government $7,425,000. An even greater sum will go for her guns and armor and other equipment, and when she goes into commission her cost to the country will have reached the huge total of $16,000,000 or more. This cost represents a reduction of nearly $600,000 in guns and armor, according to the navy department, under the prices paid for the Pennsylvania's offensive and defensive equipment. It was in dealing with contracts for the Arizona's armor that Secretary Daniels demanded competitive bidding and succeeded in effecting the saving.

SUBMARINE BASE OFF IRISH COAST?

Speculation as to How Raiders Get Supply of Oil.

NAVAL MEN DOUBT THEORY

Submerged Tanks in Inlets Could Furnish Gasoline to Undersea Craft. However, Torpedoes Must Be Replenished and Crews Must Have Rest Off the Boats.

Washington.—Speculation as to the Germans having established secret submarine bases in isolated coves along the Irish coast was revived in semi-official circles in Washington by the publication of a dispatch from Crookhaven, Ireland, which told of a submarine having been sighted and fired upon near that place.

For some time there has been a strong belief here that there have been secret submarine bases of this character somewhere along the western or southwestern coasts of Ireland. It was definitely ascertained, however, that no information had been received by the navy department from its intelligence sources abroad confirming the discovery of any of the supposed secret bases. If there are any such bases the indications in the shores of Ireland may have been conveniently utilized by the Germans for that purpose.

In the absence, however, of definite knowledge that such a base has been established, well informed naval officers cast doubt on this explanation of the facility with which German submarines have been able to operate in the stretch of water between Fastnet rock, the first lighthouse seen by transatlantic passengers bound for Queens-town and Liverpool, and Bishop's rock, where they catch their first glimpse of a lighthouse when going to Southampton.

Naval officers apparently are agreed on one point—that none of the submarines that have attacked merchant ships off the south and west coasts of Ireland have gone to those sections of the German naval war zone around the British Isles by way of the strait of Dover or the English channel. The British have so effectively protected the approach to the English channel by a mine field extending from Ostend to the entrance to the Thames that no German warship, floating or submarine, has yet been shown to have passed that obstruction.

Naval officers here do not believe that submarines could successfully pass through this mine field. They also point to the announcement recently made in parliament that England had been able successfully to transport about 750,000 soldiers from England to France and Belgium across the channel without the loss of a single transport or the death of a single man during the cross channel journey. If German submarines were able to go to the south coast of Ireland by the channel route and there sink merchant ships, it is pointed out, the same submarines could have sunk British troopships, which would be of greater military advantage to Germany than the mere sinking of merchant ships, which carry only noncombatants.

With the English channel approach to the west and south coasts of Ireland as well as to the Scilly Isles closed, the German submarines would have to take the North sea and north of Scotland route to the western shores of the British Isles. Having once sent submarines to the Irish coast, it was said here, the Germans might obviate the long journey around Scotland, to and from Ireland and Germany, by establishing secret bases on the Irish coast, and the theory is very strong that this has been done.

The naval experts, however, believe that the submarines have made the journey back and forth around Scotland. One high naval officer said that the Germans were known to have submarines with a steaming radius of 4,000 or 5,000 miles, which could easily negotiate the long journey. It was suggested to him that if there were secret bases on the Irish coast there might be submerged tanks of gasoline which the submarines could visit at night, raising them to replenish their fuel supply and then sinking them again, and that it was easy to imagine that they have constructed large tanks that could be towed under water.

This officer admitted that this was possible, though he did not believe it had been done. He said that the use of such tanks was proposed some time ago to this government, but he believed, in the light of a great deal of information that he had received, that the German submarines were not following the secret base practice. He pointed out that it was necessary for submarines to replenish their supplies of torpedoes, something that could not be done from a secret base as easily as replenishing gasoline stock, and that, what was even more important, the work of the men who operated German submarines was so exacting and the strain upon them so terrific that it would be necessary for the crews to return to their German bases after their raids to recuperate. This officer also said that, while it was barely possible that the Germans might be making use of some remote island or cove, there were too many persons on watch around the Irish coast for such bases to remain easily a secret.
