WASHINGTON, May 1, 1868. The President is of the opinion that he will be impeached, with opinion is shared by his confidential friends. Indeed, Randall fell into his snare when he told him that he had come to that conclusion, and remark that that was the first correct conclusion he had come to since he had been President.

triumphing by genius and persistency. He came here years ago, without a reputation, and set himself to work as a teacher of music. His excellence as an instructor gained him the patronage of our first families, and he soon obtained a good position for a music teacher. Among his pupils was Miss Loring, a charming young lady, with considerable talent and no inconsiderable attractions. With her artistic soul, she was led to fall deeply and passionately in love, notwithstanding the difference in their social (by which I mean only pecuniary) position. She returned the affection of the young musician, and it was not long before such was made aware of the lady's situation, and the young lady was hustled off to Europe, out of the way of her lovelorn instructor. There she was to be made to fight the attachment, and become prepared for some more reasonable and advantageous match. She was kept abroad for a long time—long enough, indeed, to put a dozen mere fancies to flight; but she returned in the same frame of mind as she had gone, determined to marry the musician, if she could not find a more suitable one. Meantime Dredel had not been idle, but was winning a place and a name by his genius and industry, and was at length in a position to offer a wife, considerably known name, as also a considerable income, to the woman of his choice. Of course, there were two such wills, there could but be one. Opposition, somewhat mollified by the change in the artist's circumstances, gave up, and the marriage took place. Now, after years of wedded life, it is certain that neither the constant couple nor their friends regret their idyllic Boston Correspondent Chicago Times.

NEW YORK. New York is so grateful for a new sensation as the Roman Emperor who employed the artist for furnishing him with a new sauce. Just now the fashionable portion of the city are reveling in a new excitement. We have here a gentleman who through his industry is as well known as in Boston, Harper, or Stewart. He lives in fine style, has a splendid house, and is surrounded by one in the elegance of taste and turnout. Central Park. It was long supposed that his housekeeper was his wife. It turns out that he does not live with his wife and that she has been for a long time supporting herself in this city by her needle. She is a very elegant and accomplished lady. For her children's sake she has held her peace for a long time, but she is now a hooly which made such a sensation at the Paris Exposition was from her needle. She found a friend in the head of one of our best establishments, and the fashionable and elaborate embroidery worn by the ton of New York was the handiwork of this lady. Recently her husband made a proposal to her. He promised to settle on her a handsome sum of money if she would allow him to obtain a divorce under our laws. The proposal was so infamous that the lady refused to be deceived, and sorrow in silence no longer. She issued a beautiful printed circular announcing herself by her husband's name, stating his business so there could be no mistake about the identity, offering her services to the fashionables of New York, assigning as a reason for the offer that she wished to obtain bread for herself and children, and stating that she could be found daily at a fashionable dress-making establishment on Broadway. This circular was sent by private hands to the husband. His indignation was so aroused that he has great pride. New York has a nine days wonder. People crowd the rooms where the lady is advertised to be seen, and where she sits day by day, surrounded by her admirers. What the issue will be still remains to be seen.

A Little Romance. The Richmond (Va.) Enquirer tells this story. A piece of good fortune has recently fallen to one of our most estimable townsmen. During the war a soldier from Louisiana formed the acquaintance of one of Richmond. He was a young man, and was formed by accident upon the same ship. He was so attracted by the soldier's affection on the part of the young son of Mars which he could not suppress. His heart was so taken up with the soldier's affection that he lingered for many months in one of the hospitals before he could report for duty. Having recovered he hastened to the camp, and in every battle sought for duty. He was so attached to the soldier's affection that he lingered for many months in one of the hospitals before he could report for duty. Having recovered he hastened to the camp, and in every battle sought for duty.

On Wednesday last her surprise was unbounded upon receiving a letter from Louisiana. It was penned by the administrator of the young man whose hand she had rejected during the war. He had never forgotten the object of his affection. He had been so attached to the soldier's affection that he lingered for many months in one of the hospitals before he could report for duty. Having recovered he hastened to the camp, and in every battle sought for duty.

Another romance. A dashingly young widow in Detroit prepared a pleasant surprise for her suitors, long eventuating since. Expecting a call, she had her maid in a convenient corner, and as she was about to open the door, she sprang out in the darkness of the evening and nearly smothered him with kisses. His cool reception of her advances startled her with a recognition of the fact that instead of her lover she had been lavishing her attentions upon the conductor of a street car, who had come with a note expressing his desire to be introduced to her.
