HOW IT IS DONE IN ST. LOUIS.

How it is Done in New York

JEWELRY STOLEN IN A HOTEL

The St. Louis Democrat says:

Between nine and ten o'clock Monday evening, a diamond-studded room, No. 23 of the Planters' House, occupied by Mr. J. L. Meyer, of Boston, Massachusetts, and breaking open two trunks in the room, stole watches, diamonds and jewelry to the value of $5000.

Mr. Meyer is a member of a large jewelry firm in Boston, and coming to this city to sell goods, brought the articles with him as samples. He left his room about half-past eight o'clock on the night of the robbery, and did not return until nearly ten. When he entered his room he found everything in confusion, and the remaining contents of his trunks scattered over the floor. The thief or thieves had probably "spotted" him, and must have known what the trunks contained. The entrance to the apartment was made through a door communicating with the adjoining room, and supposed to be properly secured.

After entering, the thieves first of the lock of one of the trunks and the hinges of the other. The trunk containing Mr. Meyer's wardrobe, it appears, was first searched, but as the rascals did not find in it what they wanted, the other was burst open and its contents searched. The thieves discovered diamonds and other articles to the value of $25,000 or $30,000, but in their haste to escape the scene only succeeded in carrying off about one-third of the articles. They must have been either greatly hurried or very poor judges of jewelry, as they carried away a number of plated chains and left behind two and three hundred gold and silver watches. Some of the most valuable diamond sets were also left behind.

The robbers departed in the same way they entered, and the police officers discovered the theft and informed the police authorities of his loss. Detectives were sent out to look for the perpetrators, but up to this time no arrests have been made. A burglar and robbery, following so closely upon the Spyder robbery, shows that there is a gang of experienced burglars in the city, who, if not brought to justice, will doubtless soon commence operations on a more extensive scale.

Some citizens assert that there are good grounds for believing both robberies to have been committed by the same, or a portion of the same gang. Others, however, feel equally certain that the thieves had followed Mr. Meyer from Boston, and, knowing what his trunks contained, only waited a favorable opportunity to rifle them.

The New York Standard tells us how the robbery business is conducted in New York:

A robbery occurred at St. Nicholas Hotel yesterday morning, than which the records of crime can show none more bold, if the statement of the Attorney General is correct. In broad daylight, at the bust of hour of the day, in this noisiest of hotels, on Broadway, a gentleman was gagged, bound, and robbed. Probably the most audacious and the most daring deed was committed with impunity, for the thieves arranged the job so well that they were enabled to escape at their leisure, carrying their plunder to the city of the future.

On Tuesday afternoon, at about half past two o'clock, a man, apparently an Italian, speaking but little English, called at the place of business of a diamond broker at No. 59 East Thirtieth street, whose place was entered by safe blowers not long since, and robbed of a large amount. The stranger announced he had a quantity of diamonds and jewelry to display, which he had brought with him from Cuba. Some of them he had with him, he said, and he showed the broker several pieces of value. The broker, who was in his room in the St. Nicholas Hotel, and he made an appointment with Isaac to come to the hotel yesterday morning at ten o'clock, when the diamonds and jewelry were to be shown.

At the appointed hour, Isaac called, and showed the card which his visitor had given him to the book keeper, requesting to be conducted to that room. The card contained the name of the visitor, No. 450. The visitor was shown to this room, which is on the fifth floor, and was admitted by DeJalis, as he styled himself, who asked Isaac to be seated, and the latter sat for about three minutes, returning with a large black common oil-cloth valise, which contained the jewels he said. The man took a bunch of keys from his pocket, and for some time, but said finally that he had not the right key, and "I had better come to your office at eleven o'clock with the jewels." He then left the room again for the car removed, but he was bound and gagged, and his face was bruised and swollen. For ten minutes he lay calling for assistance, when the carpenter of the hotel, hearing his cries, burst the door open, and found the man lying on the floor, his face swollen and his hands and feet bound. For ten minutes he lay calling for assistance, when the carpenter of the hotel, hearing his cries, burst the door open, and found the man lying on the floor, his face swollen and his hands and feet bound.

Mr. Isaac, a man of some observation and at this time and place, was very suspicious of the man who entered, and had evidently come from the adjoining room, No. 443, stepped before him and warned him to get up, and he did so, and the man then seized Isaac and gagged him, and the two threw him down on the floor. They then applied a towel saturated with chloroform to his face, and he fell, and he remains nothing more.

In about twenty-five minutes he recovered consciousness, and found himself alone and the car removed, but he was bound and gagged, and his face was bruised and swollen.
