OPERATIONS OF SAFE BLOWER.

EXTENSIVE ST. LOUIS STREET BURGLARY.

PLUNDER OF ROCHEREAU & CO.

THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS STOLEN.

A SATURDAY NIGHT'S TRANSACTIONS.

It appears that burglars of the more ambitious class continue to operate as boldly as in former times, and quite as scientifically. Saturday night, after the extensive stores of Messrs. A. Rochereau & Co., large importers and well known commission merchants, Nos. 16 and 18 St. Louis street, were closed as usual, burglars took possession and operated on the safes at leisure, carrying off an amount of wealth to an extent as yet unknown. The burglars who undertook the job must have posted themselves in many minor details, examining several weeks. The Bulletin's report is so correct that we copy a portion of it.

Superintendent Badger and his aid Malone, took a minute survey of the scene, and they were not slow in concluding that the job was the work of Pierre Berlin and his mob, the same man who so easily robbed the safe of the Levee and the safe of the Levee. There was nothing in particular to prove the conclusion, but the police went to work on that line. Malone had lost run of Berlin since the great release, and was obliged to trace him up as from a beginning. This was not easy, yet he, with special officers Smith and Peora, kept moving all Sunday night, viewing Pierre's old localities, but they found nothing agreeable. Toward morning Malone struck a vein, and ascertained that Capdeville, another well known burglar, lived on Orleans, near John street. They posted off to the house, and noticed a furniture cart at the door, loading up. Entering, they found no one but the driver; they immediately left, with the intention of following the cart; they kept their eyes on it, and noticed a woman not far behind. Arriving at No. 42 White, near Esplanade street, the cart backed up to the door. This was a signal for the officers to enter, and it is well they did, for on the hard floor was stretched Pierre Berlin, crying off a pistol at his side, he evidently trying to get some rest. With their revolvers pointed at him, he could only surrender. It did not take much time to search him, and the search proved a valuable one, for on his person were found between five and six thousand dollars worth of valuable papers from Rochereau & Co., which have since been fully identified, also a bundle of stolen goods. Berlin was then taken to prison. In the same house, at the time the officers found Mr. Fuller, an attorney. He stated that he had called there in consequence of receiving a note from one of the men.

This was good progress, but not sufficient. The woman who followed the furniture is intimate with Jean Capdeville, and they naturally believed that he was not far off. They were posted for him, and in less than half an hour he was a prisoner, also, as he attempted to enter No. 42. This is highly creditable to the police engaged, and proves that the detective department is improving. Colonel Badger and his officers neither are nor ought to be able to accomplish what is related above. It is now possible that they will be able to recover nearly all the stolen goods before a week passes.

Cesar Hunt, a tinker or blacksmith, was arrested for having made burglar's tools. He admitted that he had made a brick-chisel for Capdeville and other thieves.

It is one of the oldest established French houses in the city, and in addition to its own immense business transactions, involving great sums of money, the eminent character borne by the firm for integrity and high business qualities, led to their establishment being made the depository of the cash, jewelry and other valuables of many of their friends and customers, particularly those among the older residents of the lower part of the city. The vaults of Messrs. Rochereau & Co. contained thousands of dollars worth of diamonds, other precious stones and jewelry, gold, heirlooms beyond price in the esteem in which they were held, besides currency and papers of value, and it is certain that the burglar's efforts until the robbers probably became alarmed at the near approach of morning, or some noise outside, and proceeded to make arrangements for their successful exit.

Whether, in accordance with the original plan, or fearing to attract the attention of the private watchman or other persons on the street, it is certain that the robbers, before they entered the vault, had made their escape showed as much of patient labor and intimate acquaintance with the locality, its surroundings and approaches as did their successful exit.

They passed with their booty through the opening in the wall between the stores of Rochereau & Co. and Dunbar & Son to the back warehouse, and then down stairs and into the lower warehouse, in the rear of which they found the third brick wall, through which it was necessary for them to cut their way before they were safely out. The burglars went to work to using their tools, and in a few minutes they had completed the task, could quietly retire and close the spring-locked door secure, that no discovery could be made before the next morning.

Could this hypothesis be reasonable? We wait for the verdict of the coroner's jury, and meanwhile a post mortem examination is likely to take place, we are informed, at the instance of some friends of the deceased, in order that something like correct scientific deductions may be drawn from the nature of the wounds as to the character of the instrument.

The funeral was very numerously attended. The services were performed by Corbinian Lodge, F. and M. E., escorted by Orleans Commandery Knights Templar. The pall-bearers were Master Masons, Royal Arch Masons, and members of the Grand Lodge. Among the last we noticed M. M. Cohen, Esq., H. C. Miller, Esq., J. O. A. Fellows, Esq., and George W. Racer, Esq. A large number of the legal fraternity were in attendance, many officers of the courts, State and Federal, and some of the occupants of the Carbide.

Academy of Music.

The engagement of Donnick Murray closed on Sunday evening, with "Brother Bill and Me," "Donah's Engagement," and "Mickey Free." In "Donah's Engagement" Mr. Murray excelled any of his previous efforts here, but perhaps an immensely crowded house prompted him to bring out his best points. Last night Mr. Wade opened with his version of Rip Van Winkle, which differs essentially from that rendered by Jefferson. The house was jammed, and there were numbers of ladies in the parquette. An extended notice of the play is crowded out this morning. "Rip Van Winkle" again this evening.

St. Charles Theatre.

The St. Charles opened to a fair house last evening, with the drama of "Eustache," and the farce of "Toodles." The same bill this evening. Secure seats early.

At a fair in Dalton, Georgia, they are enjoying the privilege of looking at a piece of timber taken from the house of Christopher Columbus. What particular benefit to agriculture, science, commerce or mechanics, this wood is to produce, we have not learned.

ANOTHER BLOODY DEED.

Assassination of District Attorney Long.

THE AFFAIR INVOLVED IN MYSTERY.

FURTHER INVESTIGATION PROBABLE.

Early yesterday morning, Gustave Trevalle, porter at the Customhouse, on entering the office of United States District Attorney Alanson B. Long, found that gentleman lying upon the floor in a pool of blood. The police and Coroner Avila were soon summoned, and an inquest was commenced, but the jury, after an examination of the body and the room, the private law office of the deceased, and his lodging apartments, were unable to come to a definite conclusion as to the cause of his death, and adjourned their deliberations until tomorrow.

Mr. Long was found with both wrists cut across, a horrible wound across his throat, in two gashes, a cut upon the upper part of his head, and two wounds upon his head, caused by blows, one of them deep. Beside this his shirt bosom was cut across the bottom, evidently having been divided by some sharp instrument. Blood was over his lounge, upon his table, upon the window and wall, and in various other places about the room. He was found on his back. After receiving his wounds, it was evident that he had sought for help at the window and door, but he had been unable to get out, and he had been strangled and then strangled. Some five feet from his body a razor was picked up. Who used it?

The deceased was a gentleman of great intellect, of absolutely correct habits, in perfect health, young, talented and beloved for his integrity, unswerving good nature and trustworthiness. A Republican, he had no political enemies. When nominated for a judgeship, two years ago, he ran a long way ahead of his ticket. With his brethren of the bar he was universally popular. Appointed to the important post of United States District Attorney at an unusually early age, he had won, in the discharge of his official duties, the commendation of the public and the government. His private life was as exemplary as his public life. He was a man who had once employed him as counsel, so zealous and successful had he been in defending and maintaining his clients' interests. Financially he was comfortably situated with every prospect of attaining an ample fortune within a comparatively short time. His reputation as a sound and successful lawyer was constantly growing. His family and other personal relations were of the happiest character. His friends considered his prospects of the future bright and brilliant, and he could not have deemed them otherwise himself. So that we can not see any motive on his part for self-murder.

A contemporary has hinted at some temporary aberration of mind on the part of Mr. Long, some time ago, but he has since graduated at college, was afflicted by a stroke of paralysis, from which he fully recovered after several sea voyages and an extended stay in the European continent. There was never any trace of insanity about him or any member of his family.

How, then, can we account for his violent death if we acknowledge his professional, personal and official position to have been altogether pleasant, his health perfect, his blood free from any taint of insanity, and his disposition genial and trusting to the last?

From an intimate friend of Mr. Long, we learn that he was, when overtaken, in the habit of throwing himself upon his lounge, placing both hands beneath his head, and in that position indulging in brief repose. Suppose that some one of the desperate characters, whom Captain Long has prosecuted before the United States courts, and who had been in the habit of visiting him, while his official letters laid before him unopened, and all about him bore the decorations of the best day of the week, and the vilification of the hour, had taken a razor with a strong, quick sweep drawn across the throat of the unfortunate victim from one side to the other, and repeated, might have laid low the man, and the body, with that dastardly weapon proving insufficient, some heavy thing was next taken to effectually and immediately still his throbbing arteries, and the body was left in that position until the robbers probably became alarmed at the near approach of morning, or some noise outside, and proceeded to make arrangements for their successful exit.

Whether, in accordance with the original plan, or fearing to attract the attention of the private watchman or other persons on the street, it is certain that the robbers, before they entered the vault, had made their escape showed as much of patient labor and intimate acquaintance with the locality, its surroundings and approaches as did their successful exit.

They passed with their booty through the opening in the wall between the stores of Rochereau & Co. and Dunbar & Son to the back warehouse, and then down stairs and into the lower warehouse, in the rear of which they found the third brick wall, through which it was necessary for them to cut their way before they were safely out. CARD FROM S. F. CASANAVE.

Not a Bolter.

New Orleans, October 31, 1870.

Hon. Michael Hahn, Editor of the Republican:

MY DEAR SIR—Please announce to the public, through the REPUBLICAN, that I am not a candidate for Administrator of Assessments or for any other office at the next election, and that the further use of my name in such a connection is unauthorized. I belong to the Republican party, and intend to support and vote for the regular Republican nominees.

Yours, respectfully,

S. F. CASANAVE.

Pierre Berlin.

The arrest of this notorious thief, for connection with the robbery of Rochereau & Co.'s safe on St. Louis street, Saturday night, affords the first intimation the public have had of the whereabouts of this adroit rogue since his discharge by Judge Cooley. We certainly hope that Judge Cooley will not summon the prisoner into his court and release him before the authorities can have an opportunity to investigate the charges against Berlin in this case, as he did when the proof was forthcoming to convict him of the robbery of Mr. J. S. Clark's safe at the corner of Canal and Broad streets.

Whatever may be the proof against Berlin in the present case, he can not escape conviction for stealing one or more of Mr. Clark's diamonds.

Now let the community sternly set their faces against any interference with the ends of justice by any court in the matter of Berlin, and let the thief be convicted, sentenced and punished.

A Western Cornelia thus maternally addresses her eldest pearl: "My daughter, you are now fifteen years of age, engaged to be married, without a freckle on your face. I have done my duty."

FROM BAYOU SARA.

ENTHUSIASTIC REPUBLICAN MEETING.

Five Thousand People Present.

(Special Dispatch to the Republican.)

BAYOU SARA, October 30, 1870.

A large and enthusiastic mass meeting was held here to-day by the Republicans of this parish. Great numbers of people were present from Pointe Coupee and West and East Feliciana.

There were, in all, at least five thousand people in attendance.

Eloquent and stirring addresses were made by Lieutenant Governor Dunn and Messrs. Harris, Lowell, Kellogg, Villere, Avery, Stockdale, Boothby and Isabelle.

Two brass bands in attendance, and the intervals of speaking with music.

A salute was fired upon the arrival of the steamer Pargoud with Lieutenant Governor Dunn and Senators Harris and Kellogg, and others, on board.

There is great unanimity of sentiment here in our party, and every prospect of a heavy vote and a large Republican majority.
