THE ILLINOIS STATE CAPITAL.

The Illinois State capital is a classical building, with a blunt, almost overhanging cornice of three acres, and it is said to be badly ventilated.

OUR STATE CAPITOL BUILDINGS.

We copy the following from the Washington Capital. The description of the Louisiana State Capitol does not answer for the present period, however faithful it may once have been.

At the present time no less than three of our States are constructing new capitol edifices. New York will attempt to rival the national capitol, and to erect a grand and airy temple, cost, nominally, five million, but probably by the day of its completion it will have consumed twice as much.

Some States, as West Virginia, have no capitol houses at all, and are, consequently, have two, but the agitation is rife there for their consolidation at Hartford. Two of the States only contain State houses in present legislative use, which date to the Revolution—Rhode Island and Maryland.

The State capital of Maryland, at Annapolis, is a handsome specimen of the brick architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of Delaware is a comfortable brick edifice, somewhat dilapidated, and, perhaps, the most insignificant of the buildings for its purposes in the country, its Senate chamber being little bigger than a jury box. A series of green parks, inclosed by wooden fences, and a fine view of the bay, and the shipping post, is in an adjoining lot.

The State capital of Maine, at Augusta, cost $120,000, and is built of granite, columns in the centre and plain wings. It stands upon a green elevation, and near it is the pleasant residence of the Governor. The Rhode Island State House, at Newport, is built of brick with freestone trimmings, and a cupola and balustrade ornament the roof.

The State capital of Massachusetts, at Boston, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of New York, at Albany, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of Virginia, at Richmond, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of West Virginia, at Charleston, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of Wisconsin, at Madison, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of Missouri, at Jefferson City, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of Louisiana, at New Orleans, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of Texas, at Austin, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

The State capital of California, at Sacramento, is a fine specimen of the classical architecture of the last century, and is surrounded by a dome and spire of stanch timber which attain the height of two hundred feet. From this edifice is afforded the very best view, possible of the Chesapeake Bay.

THE STOLEN MASK.—This is a short tale by Wilkie Collins, and, like all the works of this pleasant writer, extremely agreeable reading.

THE TROUBLED HEART.—This is a novel by Mrs. Hemans, and, like all the works of this pleasant writer, extremely agreeable reading. The work strongly illustrates Mr. Collins' remarkable talent for making a great deal out of nothing.

MEXICO.

Advices of Importance. HAVANA, March 18.—Advices from the City of Mexico, of the thirteenth instant have been received.

Palacios has resigned the governorship of the State of Mexico. Manuel Sameris is his successor. Father Fisher, Maximilian's secretary and confidant, has been appointed.

The return of Minister Nelson, of the United States, is expected early. The supporters of Lerdo and Harjorist in Congress had united and obtained a victory over the Juristas by electing Zamacoa speaker.

The Times Republic considers the present epoch of uprising, and says that party fury may do mischief to the republic in the capital. An event which would be followed by anarchy.

Ministerial changes are hourly expected. A cabinet of Salas has been appointed. It is the general impression that Congress will pass a law prohibiting the re-election of Juarez. If so, Juarez will ignore it.

It is the general impression that Congress will pass a law prohibiting the re-election of Juarez. If so, Juarez will ignore it. It is not probable that the law will be executed.

In either case, Juarez, with the power of government in his hands, has his advantage. The republic is tranquil, except a small district in the State of Guerrero.

The relations of the republic to the United States are amicable, although with some they continue interrupted, nevertheless all foreigners in Mexico are protected. The answer of the Speaker was exceedingly satisfactory.

He says the condition of the republic is due to the power which Congress vested in the President; that peace and liberty must be restored; that the law is troubled owing to a fear for the cause of liberty in the next elections; that it is the duty of Congress to tranquilize the country; that the people must be allowed to vote freely and untrammelled.

The government officials have adopted an improper attitude upon the electoral question; that the official journal should be printed on medalling with the elections; and that Congress has unfortunately before it documents which indicate that the troubles of some of the States are neither slight nor terminated.

The Speaker, however, has expressed the belief that the executive will aid in guaranteeing independence and sovereignty to the States; that Congress will resolve patriotically because it expresses the voice of the people and because it holds the future of the nation in its hands.

The war of races continues in Yucatan. The disturbances in the Indian District of Chiapas have not been quelled. Fourteen soldiers were killed in an encounter.

President Juarez permits Bishops La Bastille and Ormaechea to return to Mexico. BERLIN. Reoccupation of Environs of Paris if Returning Germans are Persecuted.

BERLIN, March 18.—The Cross Gazette, a semi-official paper, says if the French persecute the returning Germans, the Prussians must reoccupy the environs of Paris, and possibly the city.
