PUBLIC SCHOOL EXHIBITIONS.

A review of the interesting exercises which concluded the scholastic year of the various intermediate schools shows that in point of numbers in attendance they are as prosperous as ever, in point of scholarship better, in discipline good as at any other time. The efforts of narrow minds to destroy the system have been unsuccessful, and every true lover of his country and of his people should feel a pride that the system, from the many attacks it has withstood, and assailants that have been humbled in the dust before it, still rears its head proudly and defiantly; still continues the great work of elevating the masses.

To enter into details may be impossible, but the fact that the system still defies its enemies is indisputable. The schools of the late City of Jefferson, now the Sixth District, are thronged with children. Here no dissension exists. But the buildings in which education is carried on, not being the exclusive property of the system, are even when in good condition, subjected to certain troubles and annoyances which the friends of the school would like to see removed. Where a school is held in a church there are many losses of books and school furniture, which of course is presumed to happen where each can lay blame on the other. Then the unsatisfactory buildings rented for school purposes in all of the districts, the leaky condition of the old roofs, the rotten and decaying floors, the shaky perpendicular of the stairs, the damp and moldy walls, the miserable accommodations for beasts, not to mention human beings. We do not suppose there is one building rented for school purposes that is fit and proper, unless it be the Beauregard school. Where the structure is good it is too small; where it is large enough it is too bad; and any one who has visited the many institutions under pay must be satisfied of the truth of these statements. What is wanted before a dollar is spent for the luxuries of education are good school buildings, on the basis of one for each thousand of educable children, statistics showing that one-half of the educable children are in actual attendance, and five hundred pupils being full as many as a school building should contain. The miserable shanties and barns now in use should be discontinued as fast as previous engagements will admit. Thirty thousand dollars or more being paid for rent of these buildings on leases conveyed by the predecessors of the present school management, it will be seen that three good schoolhouses could be built each year with this amount, or else temporary buildings might be built to satisfy educational demands. The crying sin of the system is the inadequate accommodations for at least one-half of the attendant pupils in the city division. In the reports from the various schools during the past week many interesting details were omitted owing to peculiar interruptions in the course of publication. It is with great pleasure that the omissions are now supplied.

The St. Philip.

This institution, so named from the street on which the fine building is located, is one of the best organized and attended in the city, and bears that reputation in all quarters. Dr. Meyer is the principal. The standing of the pupils, and the systematic classification is appended:
