GENERAL LONGSTREET.

Time for their roused passions to cool having elapsed, and sober reason to resume its sway, we desire to point the attention of Louisianians to the fact that for a second time a distinguished citizen-soldier has placed them under a debt of gratitude abnormally incalculable in its magnitude. For a second time the wonderful firmness, the cool, unerring judgment, the splendid military skill of General Longstreet have saved New Orleans, our loved metropolis, from the horrors and the crushing ruin of a revolutionary mob. In the crisis so recently passed, as in the attempted overthrow of the government a year previous, to this brave gentleman must be accorded the high credit of being the chief instrument which maintained and enforced the authority of the government, and although the due credit of praise for these great services may yet be withheld by some, all honest minds are now convinced that the future contains for him only the high esteem and honor of those of his fellow-citizens whose good will is worth the having.

In accepting the terms of surrender and the parole granted at Appomattox, General Longstreet did it with the profound conviction that the decision of the contest by that highest of arbitrators, the sword, was final and complete; and therefore the transfer of his allegiance to the government which had conquered him was not forced or strained, but the most natural result of a mind trained to a reverential respect for and strictest obedience to the laws. The political schemer or intriguer, the insincere and selfish speculator, might, under such circumstances, have cunning mental reservations which to him would justify a betrayal of the pledge of submission; but not so the blunt, honest and gallant soldier, whose parole is a bond to be maintained at the expense of his life itself.

General Longstreet's maintenance of fidelity to the government since the war have been an unwavering and conscientious as was his support of the "lost cause," and these magnificent evidences of an inviolable integrity of purpose and a straightforward mind have won him a high place in the esteem of his fellow-countrymen. Despite the earnings of petty natures which have no room for such elevated and ennobling principles. We hope the opportunity will soon be opened for the employment of this splendid talent in a field where they will prove of the greatest value to the entire country.

It may not be inappropriate to refer in this place to a most enjoyable reunion of the principal militia officers of the State. The occasion was a recent complimentary dinner given by General Longstreet and staff to Brigadier General Badger, of the Metropolitan Brigade, to which the Commander-in-Chief, Governor Kellogg, Adjutant General Street, Judge Advocate General Dibble and others were also invited. We use it in no luck-nerved sense in saying, "there was a feast of reason and a flow of soul," for a more happy and congenial company never gathered round a festive board. Under the inspiring influences of the banquet (for Mornau had laid all the principal eaters under contribution) and good companionship, the pledge of long-enduring friendships was supplemented by witty sayings that sparkled like gems of many facets. And through it all ran a manifest determination to cease no efforts that will conduce to making our citizen soldiery a reliable, honorable corps, reflecting honor at once upon its members and the State.

A pleasant surprise to the members of General Longstreet's staff is best told by the order which Adjutant General Street read, under the approving smiles of Governor Kellogg, at the close of the feast. We append it:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Adjutant General's Office, New Orleans, March 17, 1873. [Extract.]

At the request of the Major General commanding the First Division Louisiana State Militia, for uniting and faithful performance of the arduous duties imposed on them during the recent troubles in this community, the following named officers are promoted to the rank set opposite their respective names, to date March 12, 1873:

Lieutenant Colonel William Wright to colonel and inspector general first division, vice Graham, deceased.

Major William F. Loan to be lieutenant colonel and aid de camp, staff first division.

Major George L. Norton to be lieutenant colonel and aid de camp, staff first division.

Major John W. Fairbairn to be lieutenant colonel and aid de camp, staff first division.

Captain John G. Longstreet to be major and aid de camp, staff first division.

They will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

By order of the Commander in Chief, HENRY STREET, Adjutant General.

The John Farrier and Research.

The latest account from the ship John Farrier, which was reported on fire at the Southwest Pass, is that, after filling her full of water, or nearly so, the fire broke out again, but was soon extinguished. At three o'clock yesterday afternoon the lighter which had been sent from the city had on board 200 bales of cotton. There were only three feet of water in the ship, and that would be all pumped out. She was doubtless got afloat so as to leave for the city some time during the night. The ship Research, lately reported in the Bermudas as having put into this port leaky, and the John Parker, are both owned by the same parties in Liverpool.

Benefit of Miss Louise Hawthorne.

We again remind the public, and especially the patrons of the Academy of Music, that to-morrow evening has been designated as the time for a complimentary benefit to Miss Louise Hawthorne, when will be presented an entirely new society play, written expressly for her, entitled "Nobility." The professional merits of this lady will be remembered at that occasion, and we shall be mistaken if she does not receive substantial evidence that she is held in high esteem by theatre-goers of New Orleans.

BROODER STOCK.—The important sale of brooder stock, to be sold by Messrs. Montgomery, on Thursday, March 20, 1873, at Dr. Elliott's stable, is worthy the attention of planters, merchants, and the public in general. For full particulars see advertisement.

Dooley's great powder is the cheapest, but not the lowest priced, baking powder. Elegant biscuits, rolls, etc., prepared in a few minutes.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.

THE HIBERNIA ASSOCIATIONS.

THE PROCESSION YESTERDAY.

IRISH-AMERICAN CITIZENS.

New Orleans is blessed with many holidays, celebrated by a cosmopolitan population—English, Scotch, French, German, Italian, Portuguese, American, Irish and other nationalities have their particular days, and our citizens take an interest in all of them. Our streets, on such occasions, are crowded with all kinds of people who anxiously look for the expected display. Naturally those most immediately interested are abroad on the occasion of national celebrations, to see relatives and friends who participate. If the day be one for Americans, Americans predominate in numbers; the same for natives and descendants of other countries.

Yesterday was given up to the Irish wearing of the green, and well did that people observe the occasion. From an early hour in the morning until late last night our Irish friends enjoyed the perfect liberty of passing the hours as best suited them, and they asked the right from no source to go their gait. No permit, no license, no favor was demanded or needed, but Irishmen were as free as air to go and come at their pleasure. This blessing of a great republic is fully appreciated by the Irish residents of this city.

The celebration of the birthday of the patron saint of Ireland was all that our Irish fellow-citizens could have desired. God favored the event, and whatever may be the feeling in Ireland against the wearing of the green, there is evidently nothing in the animal or vegetable kingdom that prohibits it in this land of rational freedom.

Long before the time for the assembling of the procession on Canal street, the note of preparation was heard in various parts of our city, and when the hour of ten o'clock had been reached, our grand business centre and most fashionable promenade began to present a far more gay and lively appearance than usual.

The large assemblage of feminine beauty and peevishly attired children was sufficient to admonish strangers that something more than usual was about to transpire, and when, on inquiry, they were informed that our Irish fellow-citizens were about to celebrate the birthday of the patron saint of Ireland, they must have been sensibly impressed with the importance of this element of society in New Orleans. When the organization of the procession was perfected, each division being properly brought into line, headed by beautiful banners and marching to the sound of soul-stirring music, the array of stalwart men was sufficiently impressive to gratify the most ardent admirers of the sons of Erin. The number thus congregated could not have been less than several thousand neatly dressed men, each wearing a green scarf and presenting a dignified and orderly appearance.

The procession was under the control of Mr. James Grant, grand marshal, with the following aids: John McAdams, Patrick Barron, Daniel Mahoney, Patrick Quinn, William Hannon, Patrick Glennon, William Sheridan, P. Comfort, John C. Murray, Thomas Moran, H. M. O'Meara, Henry Corneley, Thomas Gaffney, J. J. Dowling, T. J
