

NEW YORK, August 19, 1873.
The New York Tribune, August 19, 1873.
Commercially speaking, has been in statu quo.

But the march through the morning was without difficulty until we came to a small stream which gave us a little trouble. Beyond this a short distance we reached the foot of a very high and steep ridge.

The waterfalls on the shores of the States of New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Maine; the springs at fashionable resorts in the interior, and the exhilarating attractions of these inimitable works of nature, the falls of Niagara and the mountains of New Hampshire, have contributed to attract, as usual, our leisure-loving, comfort-seeking, money-spending residents.

The wealthiest of our residents, as of other places, no doubt, are jaunting with their families or for business purposes across the Atlantic ocean and over Europe. In this way, since the establishment of the convenient and swift palace steamship lines to the principal ports of England, France and Germany, much money heretofore annually distributed in travel in the United States has been expended in travel seeking health and sight-seeing in those ancient countries. The developments made on the Pacific coast during the last ten or twenty years have also incited the lovers of travel in that direction. But for railroad accidents, steamboat explosions, and a busy press, we should have little sensation for the breakfast table or "after dinner."

Our customhouse and President Grant's civil service seem to be in conflict just now. The "outs" insist upon urging the President's policy, while the "ins" do not see the sense of thus interrupting the public business.

It has so happened this summer that the changeable weather has been unfavorable for the watering places, and unusually genial toward New York. With the exception of a very short term in the early part of July, the city has been decked in her best colors; the hotels were never more comfortable and the landladies never more accommodating. The Park with its boundless, unequalled drives, its rich lawns, undulating, beautiful grounds, its secluded walks and charming lakes, the whole embellished with the choicest works of stationary, never presented a more magnificent, picturesque combination of nature and art. Northward and the local watering places alluded to, the drives and the walks of the Park seem as lively as ever. Indeed it has become to the traveler from the South and West as attractive as many of the other prominent places visited. On Sunday evening I observed a distinguished citizen of New Orleans, clad in overcoat and beneath a comfortable pair of slippers, riding through the Park in a barouche, behind a pair of swift-footed bays. The air was bracing, and the sun, just setting, pierced the clouds to the zenith with its golden arrows, while one hundred Moscovese seemed to reflect their red glare from all along the western horizon.

Within a few days your collector, Mr. Casey, your judge, Mr. Durell; your late Governor, Mr. Warmoth; one of your fusion congressmen, General Sheridan, and other representative men of the Crescent City have been "doing the Park."

General Butler is again astride the political horse, but whether it is a "war-horse," or only one for "civil service" remains for the Republican State Convention of Massachusetts to settle next month. The preliminary steps taken to frighten weak-back Republicans, by the ornamental members of the party, do not count much. Those gentlemen, Mr. E. Rockwood Hoar & Co., are used to fill up a list of vice presidents, and sit upon the platform, at a State convention, to give an air of dignity and respectability to the occasion; but no such men ever attend primary meetings in the remote precincts of the State, in the towns and wards of the city, where the delegates to State conventions are elected. The class of men who do attend these primary meetings, are the federal office holders in the postoffices, internal revenue, customhouse, navy yard, and other departments of the public business. These men, all over the State of Massachusetts, with a few exceptions in Mr. Dawes' district, are very friendly to General Butler, and are in favor of his nomination in the Republican convention for Governor. Judge Russell, the collector of the port of Boston, and General Butt, postmaster of that city, and most of their subordinates are working to secure General Butler's nomination by the party. The question is often asked by a wiseacre class of politicians, "Is President Grant for General Butler for Governor of Massachusetts?" The correct fighting answer to that question, from a plucky Massachusetts man, would be that President Grant is not a lone voter in that State, and that it is none of his business. But the "humble boy's" political answer of each of these gentlemen holding President Grant's federal offices in that State, is the stereotyped response, "I await the decision of the convention at Worcester." Such an answer to one who is familiar with the construction of a genuine State Republican convention at Worcester, is strikingly impotent. As there is a construction corporation ("Credit Mobilier"), so there is a construction caucus connected with every Republican State convention in Massachusetts. It meets at the principal hotel in Worcester (the Bay State House in former years) the evening before the convention assembles. It provides for a temporary chairman, a president, committees, and designates the men who at particular next days shall rise in the convention to read and make motions. These men chiefly consist of delegates to the convention or their friends who figured out the State for weeks previous at the primary meetings, for the election of these officers. A party is selected in the caucus to move in the convention that the nomination be made by acclamation. And thus Benjamin F. Butler, for instance, will be nominated for Governor, etc. Another party is assigned to "second the motion," and the committee on enthusiasm, stationed cautiously through the convention, makes the hall ring with their shouts for the candidate named.

It is true, as was remarked in this city three days since by ex-Governor Boutwell, that the present expression of the press of Massachusetts do not reflect the real strength of General Butler in the State. Most of the country papers in the State, whose editors were formerly members of the old Whig party, as was Bowles, of the Springfield Republicans, have never got over their feelings of hate for Butler, who, to them, is to-day a "dicofoce," as they formerly characterized him and all other Democrats. With the exception of the Springfield Republican, the papers opposing Butler are of small circulation and of little influence. They are of chief value in their neighborhood as advertising sheets for the retail grocer and dry goods dealers. The Boston daily Traveller, an old established and influential Republican journal, of large circulation, and historical writer, Hon. Charles C. Lowell, editor, takes the cudgel in support of General Butler's nomination by the Republican Convention. The Traveller is making good time for the General. It represents the strength in the State, but all the papers opposing the General combined. He not only has the sympathy but the official expression in his favor of the workingmen of the State who are politically opposed to General Butler, but who will vote for him if he is nominated either by the Republicans or an independent candidate. They will do so as opponents of the existing State liquor law, which Butler is pledged to kill by enforcing it.

Butler is too powerful in Massachusetts to be thrown aside by the present Republican party in that State. It is very risky. Notwithstanding this, "a cocky grab bill," he is strong. When Dawes or the Republican mentions the subject Butler shouts "Credit Mobilier." Butler supports Grant and receives, in response, the undivided support of the President's officials, high and low, throughout the commonwealth.

The national government is a good deal scattered. The President is to-day among the White Mountains accompanied by his staff, Speaker Blaine, Senators Cameron and Conkling and numerous other officials. It is a subject of considerable anxiety, in these times of railroad, stage and steamboat accidents that the President should devote so much of his time on board them in travel. The Vice President's illness increases the feeling as in the event of the President's death, Mr. Wilson could not long survive, in his present condition, the pressing responsibilities of the office. He is under medical treatment and is required to cease his labor, upon his "History of Anti-Slavery."

Hon. Galusha A. Grow, president of the International Railroad Company of Texas, is here, and for the last week he has been in consultation with the representatives of the Houston and Great Northern Railway Company, the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company, the Cairo and Fulton Railroad Company and the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company. They have formed such combination as to perfect the line of travel upon an equalized gauge of road (four feet eight and one-quarter inches) from the northern termini of Cairo to Laredo, on the Rio Grande. From thence the Mexican International Railroad Company commences their line to the City of Mexico, via the city of Lagos. This road was contracted for with the government of Mexico in May last, by Mr. Edmund Lee Plumb, formerly consul general and acting United States minister at Mexico. The convention met at dinner a tall Hoosier, Mr. Plumb represented the above named companies, whose legal agent he was. After accomplishing the main features of his work returned here and has been in consultation with President Grow at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Mr. Plumb informs the writer that the prospect of the construction of this road has made a signal change for good in the feeling among the members of the government of Mexico and the people, in view of opening up communication by direct line to all the principal cities of the United States. Mr. Plumb left here on Saturday last for Havana, en route to Mexico, to complete some unfinished business and prepare surveys of the new road.

President Grow says the above named companies in joint interest are hurrying up all their roads, and the construction of that contracted for in Mexico. Mr. Grow will leave for Houston, Texas, in a few days.

Red Salt. A young parson of Universalist faith many years since when the simon pure Universalism was preached, started westward to attend a conference at New York in the faith. He took the precaution to carry a vial of cayenne pepper in his pocket as a preventive against fever and ague. The convention met at dinner a tall Hoosier observed the parson as he seasonally moistened his mouth, and addressed him thus: "Stranger, I'll thank you for a little of that red salt, for I'm kind of curious to try it."

"Certainly," returned the parson, "but you will find it very powerful; be careful how you use it."

The Hoosier took the proffered vial, and feeling himself provoked against any quantity of red salt, thought he could stand the "red salt" with impunity. Accordingly he sprinkled a chunk of beef rather bountifully with it, and forthwith introduced it into his capacious mouth. It soon began to take hold. He shut his eyes, and his features began to writhe, denoting a very disagreeable and painful condition. Finally he could stand it no longer. He opened his mouth and screamed "Fire!"

"Take a drink of cold water from the jug," called the parson.

"Will that do?" asked the martyr, sitting the action to the word. In a short time the unfortunate man began to recover, and turning to the parson, his eyes wet with tears, he exclaimed: "Stranger, you call yourself a 'Universalist,' I believe!"

"I do," mildly answered the parson.

"This will do to know if you think it consistent with your beliefs to go about with bell-fire in your pockets?"

A Peep for a Washerwoman. The trials of the washerwomen with their delinquent debtors are proverbially multitudinous. One of the most recent cases, which is alleged to have recently been brought to an issue in Toledo, Ohio, is told by the Cleveland Plain Dealer as follows: "The defendant, a woman named Mrs. Gregg, a washerwoman—her name is not given—falling, after repeated applications, to collect a bill of $15 against Gregg, should wash away the debt. Leaving her promptly put in an appearance, she pleaded the correctness of the bill, but put forward as an offset to it the following bill: 'X's yet to wash Gregg, Dr.'

To damages done to his feelings in compelling her daughter to break off her engagement with him, $19.62.

This, it will be observed, was the exact amount of the bill against him. The justice handed the bill to the woman for her signature. She could not deny the allegation as to the engagement, though deprecating the amount. The outcome of this remarkable legal contest was that the justice overruled the demurrer and dismissed the case in favor of Mr. Gregg.

Managing a Husband. A Pennsylvania lady has a most romantic and ingenious way of managing the gentleman so happy as to be her husband. Exasperated by her persistent conversation, he indignantly boxed her ears the other day. The wretched woman cast but one lingering, reproachful glance upon her lord and fled, simply remarking that the bring deep should wash away the insult. Leaving her with one paring nail there in a large stent with a mighty splash. Then she went and hid herself in the bushes and giggled, while her husband and twenty other wretches, who were so despicably duped by their countenance, and wildly searched the canal for her body. When the injured beauty was found, she appeared behind the bushes and led him home, resigned and willing victim.
