Distillery Burnings.

The recent attempts to fire the distilleries of S. W. Hammond and Dennis O'Brine, in this city, have naturally caused much comment among the distillers here, and rewards have been offered for such information as may lead to the identification and conviction of the incendiary miscreants.

The last attempts to burn distilleries discovered a carefully arranged plan by the same parties to do their work effectually. The entrance to Mr. Hammond's premises, on Ferdinand street, known as the Excelsior Distillery, was effected by forcing a back gate to the yard while the watchman was in front of the buildings.

On Monday morning, at about two o'clock, fire was discovered on the premises of the Dennis O'Brine distillery, owned by Mr. Henderson. This distillery is located on Water street, near Napoleon avenue, and is some seven miles distant from Mr. Hammond's place.

At the O'Brine place the watchman gave an alarm upon smelling fire, and also discovered a man lurking about the place, as if not satisfied with his work. The stranger coolly fired upon the watchman and made his escape, leaving behind a hat and also a sack in which the combustible materials must have been brought.

In this connection it may be mentioned that on the sixteenth of November, 1873, was burned at Carrollton the Thomas distillery. This was the work of incendiary hands, and it occurred but a few days previous to the time when distilling operations would have commenced.

The cause for these attempts to destroy private property can scarcely be imagined. The business of distilling, although not so extensive as in the West, is still an important one in New Orleans. It employs a large amount of capital, and gives work directly to very many laborers.

The matter of suppressing distilleries by burning them is one much more serious. The Knights of Temperance have usually confined their efforts to appeals to the drinker, and the work of the crusader has been that of praying with the seller, neither have applied the torch to the manufacturers' property.

Seventeenth Senatorial District.

It was supposed that when Colonel T. S. Johnson withdrew from the senatorial contest in this district, in favor of Mr. George C. Benham, that the breach in the Republican party would be healed, and all unite in support of the latter named gentleman.

In the parish of Madison a mass meeting was held last Wednesday, which was addressed by Colonel Johnson, Colonel William Marrell and others. The former explained that he had withdrawn at the request of prominent officials in the city, with a view to strengthening and uniting the party.

Our cable dispatches, received last night, announce the death, in Paris, of Marcus Smith, the well known American actor. Mark Smith was born in this city January 7, 1829, and was a son of old Sol Smith, the old time actor and manager.

He acted Diggory in a farce, playing under the management of his father. He afterward became famous in English comedy at Wallack's Theatre, New York, and established himself in reputation as being one of the first personages of the old English comedy.

Resolved, That while all necessary wants of the State government would be supplied by a reasonable, just and uniform taxation, the laboring people of this State should not be stopped by the employment and maintenance of too many office holders; hence it becomes the duty of the Legislature to lessen the number of officials.

Resolved, That all railroad corporations of the State are creatures of its Legislature, and it is the duty of the Legislature to protect them to such wise and impartial enactments as will protect the people of the State from extortion, and will secure the transportation of products, merchandise and passengers at reasonable rates.

Resolved, That the present peace policy of dealing with the Indians has failed to afford adequate protection to the frontier, and we advocate the transferring the Indian bureau to the control of the War Department.
