

New Orleans Republican. JOURNAL OF THE UNITED STATES. JOURNAL OF NEW ORLEANS.

ADVERTISING SALES TO-MORROW. J. SPREAR, at 10 o'clock, at No. 40 St. Charles street, billiard tables, etc.

Local Intelligence.

MR. T. DEVEREAUX FOR MURDER. Judge Turn in the case—Judge yesterday resumed his examination of the charge against Mr. Devereaux, not having killed Munson Alexander, Oct. 1874. The State having closed Saturday, the defense called witnesses today.

Castellanos presented an affidavit, filed by James Barry, accusing James Smith of the killing of Alexander, and Smith was arraigned and the affidavit taken.

Lansburg stated that, as Mr. Smith principal witness in this case, he is to be protected and be free from arrest. The district attorney refused a writ of habeas corpus for Smith, and he had only one course to pursue—the last being sworn to and must be accepted.

Castellanos insisted on having a warrant for Smith's arrest. The court accepted the affidavit, and Mr. Smith was placed under arrest.

Central badge—Was Superintendent of Police in May, 1874; Captain was chief of detectives at that time. The badge was given to him by Alexander, and the officers held a trial; a few days before Alexander was made a desperate resistance and he was shot. He asked if it had been any other man who had a long pistol, and the paper to cover the wound.

Early yesterday morning, the room occupied by two members of the opera bouffe company, was entered by a thief, who stole a gold watch and some currency. Marie Washington, a servant in the Pelican house, was arrested on suspicion.

James Bradley was thrown from his cart, at the corner of Coliseum and Washington streets, and nearly killed. One of the wheels passed over his body. He was sent to his home, corner of First and Annunciation streets.

New goods, new styles, low prices, at Mme. Rosa Reynoir's, No. 9 Chartres street.

BACKRAT GLASSWARE AND FINE CHINA.—The friends of that old and reliable merchant, Mr. Isidore Levi, are requested to call at Messrs. A. Peiser & Co.'s, No. 21 Magazine street, where they will find a most elegant assortment of real imported Backrat and engraved glassware, decorated vases and China sets, Parian marble figures, house furnishing goods, etc.

THE BATTLE TO BEGIN SOON.—Reinforcements pouring in through every channel, and the indefatigable Levy to bring up the reserve. Novelties by the million are arriving daily, and displayed as fast as unpacked. All the new styles of trimmings, in silk, fur and feathers; dress buttons, silk scarfs and handkerchiefs, novelties in jewelry, etc. We bespeak for the Dollar store a succession of triumphs this season unequalled in the annals of former fall displays. We need hardly remind the public, especially the ladies, that it would be a treat to them to drop in daily and see what is going on in the Dollar store. Of course everybody knows Levy's, No. 137 Canal street.

HAIR GOODS AND FANCY ARTICLES.—Mr. George T. Schilling, who for many years has been known as a reliable dealer in human hair goods, braids, curls, switches, combs, brushes, fancy toilet articles, soaps, etc., has opened at No. 129 Canal street with an entirely new stock of goods well worthy of the inspection of our readers. He gives the best of goods, the latest styles, and charges moderate prices. His old store, No. 381 Dryades street, will also be continued, and those purchasing at either place may rest assured of a courteous reception and fair dealings.

BEAUTIFUL GOODS.—A magnificent display of watches, jewelry, diamonds and silverware may be seen at Mr. M. Sooler's, No. 105 Canal street. Mr. Sooler has had many years experience in his business, and his rare taste and ability have often been acknowledged in this city. During his recent visit North Mr. Sooler secured the latest and most beautiful goods, which he is now offering to his customers at very low prices.

HARDWARE, SHIP CHANDLERY, ETC.—The great and important sale of hardware, ship chandlery, etc., to take place, commencing at 10 A. M. on Monday, November 22, by Messrs. Montgomery, is worthy the attention of the public and the trade in general. For full particulars refer to the advertisement. Catalogues at sale.

DRY GOODS.—Look out for the great sale of dry goods on Monday, November 22, at No. 100 Canal street. Sixty boxes new stock to be unpacked for sale. Messrs. Montgomery are the auctioneers.

Beautiful goods and reasonable prices at Mme. Rosa Reynoir's, No. 9 Chartres street.

Mr. DeBar closes his engagement with himself at the St. Charles Theatre to-night, playing Ralph Stockpile in the "Nick-of-the-Woods."

The dramatic event of the week will be the appearance at the St. Charles Theatre on Monday evening of Mr. Lawrence Barrett, who will enact Richard. The merits of Mr. Barrett as an actor are too well known in this community to need elaborate notice. For several years he has confined himself to a few great characters, and he has mastered them. He has been rewarded for his studious application by fame, at home and abroad, and by what is quite as agreeable, money. Mr. Barrett is an actor who polishes and perfects the parts he acts, and he is an actor in the honor of the American stage; in all ways, a gentleman and a scholar. He will receive good support at the St. Charles from the regular company, with the additional assistance of Mr. John W. Norton, who comes from the Grand Opera House of St. Louis especially to play the opposite of Mr. Barrett in tragedy. The business of the week will be "Richard," Monday; "Duke's Motto," Tuesday, and Wednesday; "The Merchant of Venice," Wednesday; "The Merry Wives of Windsor," Thursday; "Hamlet," Friday, and "Richard III.," Saturday night.

This will be the last week of the French opera bouffe troupe at the Varieties Theatre. "La Jolie Parfumeuse" will be given to-night, and on Monday evening "Le Petit Faust" for the first time this season. No better performances of opera bouffe, taken as a whole, have ever been seen in this country than those given by the Chizola troupe.

At the Academy of Music, to-night, Haverly's minstrel will put in an appearance. This troupe is one of the best traveling. The favorite men, Barlow and Wilson, are still with it, and the quartette and ballad singing are of the best description. On the sixth of December Mr. Barry Sullivan will commence an engagement at the Academy, and for a few nights at least we are to see the most legitimate of legitimate acting by a great tragedian, and a company strengthened for his support.

Recent Publications. SIXTY-SIXTERS. By Juliana Harada Ewing. Published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. For sale by R. G. Eyrich, No. 130 Canal street, New Orleans.

This is a very tastefully printed and bound book, which the author says is a story for girls. It is written in an easy, conversational style, readily understood, and appealing directly to the good sense of young readers. It is the story of a good little girl who did not die, and is all the better for that. The book contains ten illustrations from the pencil of a lady, and, as a whole, will make an acceptable present for a young miss.

MICE AT PLAY. By Nell Forest. Published by Roberts Brothers, Boston. For sale by R. G. Eyrich, No. 130 Canal street, New Orleans.

This is denominated as a "story for the whole family," and it is a romping little book of connected fire-side stories. The children talked of to circus—play all sorts of games—and none of them are good enough to die young. Eighteen illustrations by Sol Eytinge add much to the value of the book.

Resignation of Mrs. Dunn. Mrs. Ellen M. Dunn yesterday tendered her resignation to Deputy Collector Herwig and Surveyor Wells of the position she has held for the past year in the Custom-house. Both officials expressed regret at losing the services of a valuable assistant, although the cause was joyful one. Mrs. Dunn has been intrusted with the performance of delicate and responsible duties, and has been a valuable adjunct to the customs service. The marriage of the lady to Senator Burch will take place at five o'clock next Thursday afternoon, at St. James' Church, Roman street.

The Coleman Case. The announcement, in another paper, of the delay in relation to the signing of the death warrant in the Coleman murder case is entirely erroneous. It is still before the Supreme Court, and the application for a rehearing has not yet been determined.

FANCY AND STAPLE DRY GOODS.—At the well-known establishment of Messrs. Levitt & Jamison, No. 126 Canal street, our readers will find a full line of imported fancy and staple dry goods, all fresh and stylish, and to be sold at greatly reduced prices.

The State Grange of Louisiana will hold its annual session in New Orleans on the fourteenth of December next, in the Grunewald Hall-building, Orleans Grange No. 53 having proffered the use of its hall for the occasion.

Remembrance of a New Orleans Girl. "Fay," the Washington correspondent of the Louisville Courier-Journal, says: A beautiful romance transpired here two days since, of which I must tell you. Miss Lizette Schumaker was once among the belles of New Orleans. Her parents were wealthy, but their affairs were not prospering. For two years she has held a clerical position in the Attorney General's office. Three years ago, a Swedish gentleman, Mr. Nils Mitaner, residing in New York, met her, and must have been interested, for he came to this city recently, and proposed marriage to the young lady, and pressed his suit so successfully that she would not return to New York without his bride. He allowed no time for trousseau or elaborate preparation. Fortunately Miss Schumaker had never parted with the family diamonds. She was also the possessor of one handsome tippet. Wednesday evening, accompanied by the Hon. Charles M. Conrad, of Louisiana, Secretary of War, and Miss Adams and Miss Weeks, of New Orleans, the bridal party quietly repaired to the Epiphany Church, and were married. The bride looked the elegant lady, in a rich silk and superb diamonds. The lady's accoutrement had changed so suddenly that only her own sex could fully appreciate her happiness in selecting her trousseau in New York with the well-aid and open purse of a fond husband. Now, who will say that this is altogether a prosaic age!

Guilbard's Burial. A Montreal letter to the New York Herald, dated November 18, says: Chief of Police Denton was ordered to report this morning with one hundred men to the mayor of Cote des Neiges and Outremont, and a body of men was ordered to proceed armed to the Catholic cemetery to protect those engaged in digging the grave. At half past eight o'clock Chief of Police Denton met the mayor at the residence of the latter, and received instructions to march his work force of about one hundred men to the Protestant cemetery. The force left the central police station at a quarter to nine o'clock, led by the chief himself, and accompanied by detectives. Forty of the men were armed with breech loading Snyder Enfield rifles, the remainder with shot-guns and sabres. They proceeded in columns of four along St. James street to Bierry street; and along that to the cemetery. The volunteers turned out on the Champ de Mars this forenoon. The Victoria Rifles was the first battalion to protect those engaged in digging the grave about 250 officers and men. They collected in the drill shed, opposite the Champ de Mars at eight o'clock. They were formed in columns of four, which were ordered to stand at ease, while the remainder of the men in company drill. At about half-past eight o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, accompanied by the chief himself, and a number of sergeants, marched from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the courthouse. The Sixth had their overcoats wrapped in a novel fashion around their shoulders. At half-past nine o'clock the mayor, Mr. Gaudin, and were commanded to stand at ease. They numbered about thirty files, and were without overcoats. Shortly afterward the Victoria Rifles were ordered to march from the drill shed to Champ de Mars, where they remained in companies. The six Victoria Rifles came on the ground, led by Colonel Martin. There were about 250 in all present. As they marched past the Victoria they were saluted by the mayor, and took up the ground on the right, facing the