

Special Correspondence of the Republican. NORTHERN POLITICS.

Revival of Business under a Conservative Republican Administration.

BOSTON, July 18, 1876.

The readers of the REPUBLICAN will remember that as late as last fall, during the State elections, then taking place in Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York, your correspondent called attention to the fact that the business depression which afflicted all sections of the American Union, embracing all interests alike, was due to the feeling of uncertainty which prevailed in financial circles in regard to the future political policy of the national government.

Events have fully confirmed these views. It is now understood that from a purely business point of view a Confederate-Democratic restoration would unsettle a great many things besides the political rights of the colored citizen. It would unsettle the national credit; it would unsettle the currency; it would unsettle United States bonds; it would unsettle the tariff.

Among the facts bearing on this question and proving the animus of the opposition in carrying out its purposes or gratifying its resentments is the course pursued by the Confederate-Democratic House of Representatives in the current appropriation bills. Here we see the public interest and credit made secondary to partisan interests and partisan hate.

It is pleasant to feel that the business interests of the country, so far as the North is concerned, will see to it that these political obstructionists and wire pullers are displaced and Conservative men placed in their seats. How far the Southern Conservatives will join the North in getting rid of this raw head and bloody bones party of the "fire-eating" South on their part remains to be seen.

A Republican administration of the government under President Hayes will impart renewed confidence to capital and thus lead at once to activity in all departments of trade. It will lead also to an increase of Republican strength from the North in both branches of Congress.

Special Correspondence of the Republican. CENTENNIAL NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1876.

Affairs in Morehouse Parish.

BASTROP, La., July 20, 1876.

A political military organization, called bulldozers, having been formed in this parish, for the purpose of controlling parish affairs according to Democratic notions, and to inaugurate a campaign on the plan of intimidating the Republican voters, I submit to you a statement of our past and present political condition, to show how far the Democrats are justified in again stirring up strife here.

Morehouse is a parish in which only one Republican vote was cast in 1868. In 1872 the Republican party was fairly organized here for the first time, and by old citizens of the South. With the exception of a few old Confederate soldiers, with the exception of the coroner and two members of the police jury, who are intelligent colored men, the addressable Republican officials were considered very clever and honorable men until they became Republicans, since which time they have been subjected to ostracism and abuse, and are now looked upon as unmitigated rascals by Democratic voters.

The tale of 1876 is soon told. Some six months ago a young man named D. S. Norwood emigrated with his carpet sack and a few dollars as a laborer to East Feliciana to this parish and took charge of the Clarion, a Democratic paper. Previous to this time political affairs had been quiet, but a crowd had been conducted within, but with decorum, and without violence.

Some months ago a man named Law, Republican in sentiment, was tried here for a crime. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club.

In common with many others, when the heat becomes intolerable, I make an agreeable exchange by going to Atlantic City, and a place more suggestive of rest, whether to the invalid or the robust, it would be difficult to find. Its accessibility to Philadelphia, its railroad facilities, its comfortable hotels and its beautiful and homelike cottages—all serve to render it one of the most delightful of our many seaside resorts.

The proprietors and keepers of the many new hotels and boardinghouses here, built in anticipation of the overflow from Philadelphia, have lost their gloomy cast of countenance since the hot weather drove so many of the sight-seers from Philadelphia toward the sea in order to recover their wonted vitality, which an active campaign on the centennial grounds temporarily depressed to the verge of positive ill health.

The Shreveport Telegram contains the following in its issue of the twentieth: The following particulars are given as furnished by the editor of the Telegram, and are substantially correct: It seems that a colored man, by the name of Alfred Boyd, living with his family in Deboto parish, about twenty-one miles from Shreveport, who is represented as one of the most hard working, industrious and reliable in the country, some time since had a misunderstanding with another colored man named Green about some pigs, each claiming them. The matter was compromised, however, and Boyd took possession of the pigs. This did not seem to suit some of the people of that locality, who swore out an affidavit of theft before Justice Roach, and a warrant for Boyd's arrest was issued. This warrant was placed in the hands of certain parties to execute, and on last Saturday night, about eleven o'clock, five men came to his residence and arrested him. He proceeded with them until reaching the gate, some distance from the house, when he saw a band of horsemen on the outside. Here some one asked, "Have you got him? Let's hang him." Another one asked, "What kind of a rope have you got?" to which the reply was, "A grass rope." Then some remarks were made of the terror—"we've got him now—we've been wanting to get him for a long time. God d—n I will hang him, anyhow. About this time he was told to close the gate, and while doing so, asked permission to tie his shoe. Stopping ostensibly to do this, he darted down the fence, was fired upon by the crowd, but managed to escape to the gate, and has not been caught yet in his search of him. Whether the party really intended to hang him or not, we do not know, but he is not prepared to say, but it was certainly a strange proceeding to come at midnight to arrest one that could have been found at any hour of the day, and the threat to hang him was enough to induce escape, and has not been content to save his life by flight. We are told that it would be fatal to him to return to his farm, where he has fine crops growing, and wife and children.

This is a sad state of affairs, if correctly stated, and may be a glad day for the country when such unjustifiable transactions are known no more forever.

Special Correspondence of the Republican. CENTENNIAL NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1876.

Affairs in Morehouse Parish.

BASTROP, La., July 20, 1876.

A political military organization, called bulldozers, having been formed in this parish, for the purpose of controlling parish affairs according to Democratic notions, and to inaugurate a campaign on the plan of intimidating the Republican voters, I submit to you a statement of our past and present political condition, to show how far the Democrats are justified in again stirring up strife here.

Morehouse is a parish in which only one Republican vote was cast in 1868. In 1872 the Republican party was fairly organized here for the first time, and by old citizens of the South. With the exception of a few old Confederate soldiers, with the exception of the coroner and two members of the police jury, who are intelligent colored men, the addressable Republican officials were considered very clever and honorable men until they became Republicans, since which time they have been subjected to ostracism and abuse, and are now looked upon as unmitigated rascals by Democratic voters.

The tale of 1876 is soon told. Some six months ago a young man named D. S. Norwood emigrated with his carpet sack and a few dollars as a laborer to East Feliciana to this parish and took charge of the Clarion, a Democratic paper. Previous to this time political affairs had been quiet, but a crowd had been conducted within, but with decorum, and without violence.

Some months ago a man named Law, Republican in sentiment, was tried here for a crime. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club.

In common with many others, when the heat becomes intolerable, I make an agreeable exchange by going to Atlantic City, and a place more suggestive of rest, whether to the invalid or the robust, it would be difficult to find. Its accessibility to Philadelphia, its railroad facilities, its comfortable hotels and its beautiful and homelike cottages—all serve to render it one of the most delightful of our many seaside resorts.

The proprietors and keepers of the many new hotels and boardinghouses here, built in anticipation of the overflow from Philadelphia, have lost their gloomy cast of countenance since the hot weather drove so many of the sight-seers from Philadelphia toward the sea in order to recover their wonted vitality, which an active campaign on the centennial grounds temporarily depressed to the verge of positive ill health.

The Shreveport Telegram contains the following in its issue of the twentieth: The following particulars are given as furnished by the editor of the Telegram, and are substantially correct: It seems that a colored man, by the name of Alfred Boyd, living with his family in Deboto parish, about twenty-one miles from Shreveport, who is represented as one of the most hard working, industrious and reliable in the country, some time since had a misunderstanding with another colored man named Green about some pigs, each claiming them. The matter was compromised, however, and Boyd took possession of the pigs. This did not seem to suit some of the people of that locality, who swore out an affidavit of theft before Justice Roach, and a warrant for Boyd's arrest was issued. This warrant was placed in the hands of certain parties to execute, and on last Saturday night, about eleven o'clock, five men came to his residence and arrested him. He proceeded with them until reaching the gate, some distance from the house, when he saw a band of horsemen on the outside. Here some one asked, "Have you got him? Let's hang him." Another one asked, "What kind of a rope have you got?" to which the reply was, "A grass rope." Then some remarks were made of the terror—"we've got him now—we've been wanting to get him for a long time. God d—n I will hang him, anyhow. About this time he was told to close the gate, and while doing so, asked permission to tie his shoe. Stopping ostensibly to do this, he darted down the fence, was fired upon by the crowd, but managed to escape to the gate, and has not been caught yet in his search of him. Whether the party really intended to hang him or not, we do not know, but he is not prepared to say, but it was certainly a strange proceeding to come at midnight to arrest one that could have been found at any hour of the day, and the threat to hang him was enough to induce escape, and has not been content to save his life by flight. We are told that it would be fatal to him to return to his farm, where he has fine crops growing, and wife and children.

This is a sad state of affairs, if correctly stated, and may be a glad day for the country when such unjustifiable transactions are known no more forever.

Special Correspondence of the Republican. CENTENNIAL NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1876.

Affairs in Morehouse Parish.

BASTROP, La., July 20, 1876.

A political military organization, called bulldozers, having been formed in this parish, for the purpose of controlling parish affairs according to Democratic notions, and to inaugurate a campaign on the plan of intimidating the Republican voters, I submit to you a statement of our past and present political condition, to show how far the Democrats are justified in again stirring up strife here.

Morehouse is a parish in which only one Republican vote was cast in 1868. In 1872 the Republican party was fairly organized here for the first time, and by old citizens of the South. With the exception of a few old Confederate soldiers, with the exception of the coroner and two members of the police jury, who are intelligent colored men, the addressable Republican officials were considered very clever and honorable men until they became Republicans, since which time they have been subjected to ostracism and abuse, and are now looked upon as unmitigated rascals by Democratic voters.

The tale of 1876 is soon told. Some six months ago a young man named D. S. Norwood emigrated with his carpet sack and a few dollars as a laborer to East Feliciana to this parish and took charge of the Clarion, a Democratic paper. Previous to this time political affairs had been quiet, but a crowd had been conducted within, but with decorum, and without violence.

Some months ago a man named Law, Republican in sentiment, was tried here for a crime. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club.

In common with many others, when the heat becomes intolerable, I make an agreeable exchange by going to Atlantic City, and a place more suggestive of rest, whether to the invalid or the robust, it would be difficult to find. Its accessibility to Philadelphia, its railroad facilities, its comfortable hotels and its beautiful and homelike cottages—all serve to render it one of the most delightful of our many seaside resorts.

The proprietors and keepers of the many new hotels and boardinghouses here, built in anticipation of the overflow from Philadelphia, have lost their gloomy cast of countenance since the hot weather drove so many of the sight-seers from Philadelphia toward the sea in order to recover their wonted vitality, which an active campaign on the centennial grounds temporarily depressed to the verge of positive ill health.

The Shreveport Telegram contains the following in its issue of the twentieth: The following particulars are given as furnished by the editor of the Telegram, and are substantially correct: It seems that a colored man, by the name of Alfred Boyd, living with his family in Deboto parish, about twenty-one miles from Shreveport, who is represented as one of the most hard working, industrious and reliable in the country, some time since had a misunderstanding with another colored man named Green about some pigs, each claiming them. The matter was compromised, however, and Boyd took possession of the pigs. This did not seem to suit some of the people of that locality, who swore out an affidavit of theft before Justice Roach, and a warrant for Boyd's arrest was issued. This warrant was placed in the hands of certain parties to execute, and on last Saturday night, about eleven o'clock, five men came to his residence and arrested him. He proceeded with them until reaching the gate, some distance from the house, when he saw a band of horsemen on the outside. Here some one asked, "Have you got him? Let's hang him." Another one asked, "What kind of a rope have you got?" to which the reply was, "A grass rope." Then some remarks were made of the terror—"we've got him now—we've been wanting to get him for a long time. God d—n I will hang him, anyhow. About this time he was told to close the gate, and while doing so, asked permission to tie his shoe. Stopping ostensibly to do this, he darted down the fence, was fired upon by the crowd, but managed to escape to the gate, and has not been caught yet in his search of him. Whether the party really intended to hang him or not, we do not know, but he is not prepared to say, but it was certainly a strange proceeding to come at midnight to arrest one that could have been found at any hour of the day, and the threat to hang him was enough to induce escape, and has not been content to save his life by flight. We are told that it would be fatal to him to return to his farm, where he has fine crops growing, and wife and children.

This is a sad state of affairs, if correctly stated, and may be a glad day for the country when such unjustifiable transactions are known no more forever.

Special Correspondence of the Republican. CENTENNIAL NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1876.

Affairs in Morehouse Parish.

BASTROP, La., July 20, 1876.

A political military organization, called bulldozers, having been formed in this parish, for the purpose of controlling parish affairs according to Democratic notions, and to inaugurate a campaign on the plan of intimidating the Republican voters, I submit to you a statement of our past and present political condition, to show how far the Democrats are justified in again stirring up strife here.

Morehouse is a parish in which only one Republican vote was cast in 1868. In 1872 the Republican party was fairly organized here for the first time, and by old citizens of the South. With the exception of a few old Confederate soldiers, with the exception of the coroner and two members of the police jury, who are intelligent colored men, the addressable Republican officials were considered very clever and honorable men until they became Republicans, since which time they have been subjected to ostracism and abuse, and are now looked upon as unmitigated rascals by Democratic voters.

The tale of 1876 is soon told. Some six months ago a young man named D. S. Norwood emigrated with his carpet sack and a few dollars as a laborer to East Feliciana to this parish and took charge of the Clarion, a Democratic paper. Previous to this time political affairs had been quiet, but a crowd had been conducted within, but with decorum, and without violence.

Some months ago a man named Law, Republican in sentiment, was tried here for a crime. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club.

In common with many others, when the heat becomes intolerable, I make an agreeable exchange by going to Atlantic City, and a place more suggestive of rest, whether to the invalid or the robust, it would be difficult to find. Its accessibility to Philadelphia, its railroad facilities, its comfortable hotels and its beautiful and homelike cottages—all serve to render it one of the most delightful of our many seaside resorts.

The proprietors and keepers of the many new hotels and boardinghouses here, built in anticipation of the overflow from Philadelphia, have lost their gloomy cast of countenance since the hot weather drove so many of the sight-seers from Philadelphia toward the sea in order to recover their wonted vitality, which an active campaign on the centennial grounds temporarily depressed to the verge of positive ill health.

The Shreveport Telegram contains the following in its issue of the twentieth: The following particulars are given as furnished by the editor of the Telegram, and are substantially correct: It seems that a colored man, by the name of Alfred Boyd, living with his family in Deboto parish, about twenty-one miles from Shreveport, who is represented as one of the most hard working, industrious and reliable in the country, some time since had a misunderstanding with another colored man named Green about some pigs, each claiming them. The matter was compromised, however, and Boyd took possession of the pigs. This did not seem to suit some of the people of that locality, who swore out an affidavit of theft before Justice Roach, and a warrant for Boyd's arrest was issued. This warrant was placed in the hands of certain parties to execute, and on last Saturday night, about eleven o'clock, five men came to his residence and arrested him. He proceeded with them until reaching the gate, some distance from the house, when he saw a band of horsemen on the outside. Here some one asked, "Have you got him? Let's hang him." Another one asked, "What kind of a rope have you got?" to which the reply was, "A grass rope." Then some remarks were made of the terror—"we've got him now—we've been wanting to get him for a long time. God d—n I will hang him, anyhow. About this time he was told to close the gate, and while doing so, asked permission to tie his shoe. Stopping ostensibly to do this, he darted down the fence, was fired upon by the crowd, but managed to escape to the gate, and has not been caught yet in his search of him. Whether the party really intended to hang him or not, we do not know, but he is not prepared to say, but it was certainly a strange proceeding to come at midnight to arrest one that could have been found at any hour of the day, and the threat to hang him was enough to induce escape, and has not been content to save his life by flight. We are told that it would be fatal to him to return to his farm, where he has fine crops growing, and wife and children.

This is a sad state of affairs, if correctly stated, and may be a glad day for the country when such unjustifiable transactions are known no more forever.

Special Correspondence of the Republican. CENTENNIAL NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1876.

Affairs in Morehouse Parish.

BASTROP, La., July 20, 1876.

A political military organization, called bulldozers, having been formed in this parish, for the purpose of controlling parish affairs according to Democratic notions, and to inaugurate a campaign on the plan of intimidating the Republican voters, I submit to you a statement of our past and present political condition, to show how far the Democrats are justified in again stirring up strife here.

Morehouse is a parish in which only one Republican vote was cast in 1868. In 1872 the Republican party was fairly organized here for the first time, and by old citizens of the South. With the exception of a few old Confederate soldiers, with the exception of the coroner and two members of the police jury, who are intelligent colored men, the addressable Republican officials were considered very clever and honorable men until they became Republicans, since which time they have been subjected to ostracism and abuse, and are now looked upon as unmitigated rascals by Democratic voters.

The tale of 1876 is soon told. Some six months ago a young man named D. S. Norwood emigrated with his carpet sack and a few dollars as a laborer to East Feliciana to this parish and took charge of the Clarion, a Democratic paper. Previous to this time political affairs had been quiet, but a crowd had been conducted within, but with decorum, and without violence.

Some months ago a man named Law, Republican in sentiment, was tried here for a crime. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club.

In common with many others, when the heat becomes intolerable, I make an agreeable exchange by going to Atlantic City, and a place more suggestive of rest, whether to the invalid or the robust, it would be difficult to find. Its accessibility to Philadelphia, its railroad facilities, its comfortable hotels and its beautiful and homelike cottages—all serve to render it one of the most delightful of our many seaside resorts.

The proprietors and keepers of the many new hotels and boardinghouses here, built in anticipation of the overflow from Philadelphia, have lost their gloomy cast of countenance since the hot weather drove so many of the sight-seers from Philadelphia toward the sea in order to recover their wonted vitality, which an active campaign on the centennial grounds temporarily depressed to the verge of positive ill health.

The Shreveport Telegram contains the following in its issue of the twentieth: The following particulars are given as furnished by the editor of the Telegram, and are substantially correct: It seems that a colored man, by the name of Alfred Boyd, living with his family in Deboto parish, about twenty-one miles from Shreveport, who is represented as one of the most hard working, industrious and reliable in the country, some time since had a misunderstanding with another colored man named Green about some pigs, each claiming them. The matter was compromised, however, and Boyd took possession of the pigs. This did not seem to suit some of the people of that locality, who swore out an affidavit of theft before Justice Roach, and a warrant for Boyd's arrest was issued. This warrant was placed in the hands of certain parties to execute, and on last Saturday night, about eleven o'clock, five men came to his residence and arrested him. He proceeded with them until reaching the gate, some distance from the house, when he saw a band of horsemen on the outside. Here some one asked, "Have you got him? Let's hang him." Another one asked, "What kind of a rope have you got?" to which the reply was, "A grass rope." Then some remarks were made of the terror—"we've got him now—we've been wanting to get him for a long time. God d—n I will hang him, anyhow. About this time he was told to close the gate, and while doing so, asked permission to tie his shoe. Stopping ostensibly to do this, he darted down the fence, was fired upon by the crowd, but managed to escape to the gate, and has not been caught yet in his search of him. Whether the party really intended to hang him or not, we do not know, but he is not prepared to say, but it was certainly a strange proceeding to come at midnight to arrest one that could have been found at any hour of the day, and the threat to hang him was enough to induce escape, and has not been content to save his life by flight. We are told that it would be fatal to him to return to his farm, where he has fine crops growing, and wife and children.

This is a sad state of affairs, if correctly stated, and may be a glad day for the country when such unjustifiable transactions are known no more forever.

Special Correspondence of the Republican. CENTENNIAL NOTES.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18, 1876.

Affairs in Morehouse Parish.

BASTROP, La., July 20, 1876.

A political military organization, called bulldozers, having been formed in this parish, for the purpose of controlling parish affairs according to Democratic notions, and to inaugurate a campaign on the plan of intimidating the Republican voters, I submit to you a statement of our past and present political condition, to show how far the Democrats are justified in again stirring up strife here.

Morehouse is a parish in which only one Republican vote was cast in 1868. In 1872 the Republican party was fairly organized here for the first time, and by old citizens of the South. With the exception of a few old Confederate soldiers, with the exception of the coroner and two members of the police jury, who are intelligent colored men, the addressable Republican officials were considered very clever and honorable men until they became Republicans, since which time they have been subjected to ostracism and abuse, and are now looked upon as unmitigated rascals by Democratic voters.

The tale of 1876 is soon told. Some six months ago a young man named D. S. Norwood emigrated with his carpet sack and a few dollars as a laborer to East Feliciana to this parish and took charge of the Clarion, a Democratic paper. Previous to this time political affairs had been quiet, but a crowd had been conducted within, but with decorum, and without violence.

Some months ago a man named Law, Republican in sentiment, was tried here for a crime. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club. He was acquitted, and he and his friends have been making a great deal of trouble for the Democratic club.

In common with many others, when the heat becomes intolerable, I make an agreeable exchange by going to Atlantic City, and a place more suggestive of rest, whether to the invalid or the robust, it would be difficult to find. Its accessibility to Philadelphia, its railroad facilities, its comfortable hotels and its beautiful and homelike cottages—all serve to render it one of the most delightful of our many seaside resorts.

The proprietors and keepers of the many new hotels and boardinghouses here, built in anticipation of the overflow from Philadelphia, have lost their gloomy cast of countenance since the hot weather drove so many of the sight-seers from Philadelphia toward the sea in order to recover their wonted vitality, which an active campaign on the centennial grounds temporarily depressed to the verge of positive ill health.

The Shreveport Telegram contains the following in its issue of the twentieth: The following particulars are given as furnished by the editor of the Telegram, and are substantially correct: It seems that a colored man, by the name of Alfred Boyd, living with his family in Deboto parish, about twenty-one miles from Shreveport, who is represented as one of the most hard working, industrious and reliable in the country, some time since had a misunderstanding with another colored man named Green about some pigs, each claiming them. The matter was compromised, however, and Boyd took possession of the pigs. This did not seem to suit some of the people of that locality, who swore out an affidavit of theft before Justice Roach, and a warrant for Boyd's arrest was issued. This warrant was placed in the hands of certain parties to execute, and on last Saturday night, about eleven o'clock, five men came to his residence and arrested him. He proceeded with them until reaching the gate, some distance from the house, when he saw a band of horsemen on the outside. Here some one asked, "Have you got him? Let's hang him." Another one asked, "What kind of a rope have you got?" to which the reply was, "A grass rope." Then some remarks were made of the terror—"we've got him now—we've been wanting to get him for a long time. God d—n I will hang him, anyhow. About this time he was told to close the gate, and while doing so, asked permission to tie his shoe. Stopping ostensibly to do this, he darted down the fence, was fired upon by the crowd, but managed to escape to the gate, and has not been caught yet in his search of him. Whether the party really intended to hang him or not, we do not know, but he is not prepared to say, but it was certainly a strange proceeding to come at midnight to arrest one that could have been found at any hour of the day, and the threat to hang him was enough to induce escape, and has not been content to save his life by flight. We are told that it would be fatal to him to return to his farm, where he has fine crops growing, and wife and children.

This is a sad state of affairs, if correctly stated, and may be a glad day for the country when such unjustifiable transactions are known no more forever.

BY TELEGRAPH.

THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION.

RALLY OF THE UNTERRIFIED.

THE LABOR-PAINS BEGIN.

SNYDER OF BOSSIER THE FIRST RESULT.

Struggle Between Patton and the Brass Band.

IRREVERENT SUGGESTIONS FROM A POLITICAL PARSON.

GAUTHREAU GETS HIS WORK IN.

HE FIRES OFF A BOMBSHELL.

Several of the Ancient Regime Among the Wounded.

TWO PROXIES FOR THE SAME DELEGATE.

A Country David Attacks the City Goliath.

JONAS THROWS A TUB TO THE WHALE.

COMMITTEES FINALLY APPOINTED.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TO-DAY.

The Prospects of the Rivals.

(Special to the New Orleans Republican.)

BATON ROUGE, July 21, 1876. At noon Colonel I. W. Patton, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, essayed to call the convention to order. As the first words left his mouth the local brass band, stationed in the gallery, set up a funeral hymn. When the first verse ended Colonel Patton again started, but the band began a second verse, and the colonel had to subside. Eventually he succeeded in introducing Mr. J. A. Snyder, of Bossier, as temporary chairman.

Mr. Snyder, a gentleman of pleasant manners, with spectacles and beard remaining, said that he had certainly no such object. Mr. Conger—Will it have such a result? Mr. Hill—It can not possibly have such a result. If it could possibly have had such an object or such a result, it certainly never would have passed the Senate; besides, soldiers' cemeteries are provided for and protected under the law of 1852, and this is simply an extension of that act. Any apprehension of that kind is wholly unfounded.

After some further discussion the bill passed. Mr. Cox of New York, asked leave to offer a resolution authorizing several committees to report on the subject of the session in regard to all matters under investigation by such committees. Mr. Hale of Maine—Object. Mr. Cox—Then I move to suspend the rules. Mr. Banks, of Massachusetts—I desire to know whether, on presentation of these reports, they are to supersede all other business. Mr. Cox—Reports will be made, and of course they will be printed. Mr. Banks—But are they to be reported for action? Mr. Cox—They may be postponed by a majority vote.

Mr. Cox—I propose to wind up next Monday the business of the House in regard to these investigations. Mr. Hale—In other words, after the committee has waited eight months, this is to give it leave to report at any time. Mr. Banks—But they can take their order. Mr. Cox—Let the gentleman vote against it. Mr. Cannon, of Illinois—I would like to have the resolution amended by requiring the reports to be submitted to the minorities of the committee. Mr. Kendall—There will be no objection to that.

The motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution was defeated by a party vote. Yeas—121. Nays—77. Not two-thirds. Mr. Hancock, of Texas, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill in regard to manufacture and regulating taxes on fruit brandy. Passed. Mr. Caldwell, of Tennessee, moved to suspend the rules and adopt a resolution amending the act of 1852, and to amend the act of 1854, and to amend the act of 1856, and to amend the act of 1858, and to amend the act of 1860, and to amend the act of 1862, and to amend the act of 1864, and to amend the act of 1866, and to amend the act of 1868, and to amend the act of 1870, and to amend the act of 1872, and to amend the act of 1874, and to amend the act of 1876.

WASHINGTON. Before the Whisky Committee. WASHINGTON, July 21.—Blufford Wilson is here to testify before the whisky committee. Paid in Full. The controller of the currency has declared a final dividend to the creditors of the First National Bank of Washington, paying them in full. Bills Signed by the President. The President has signed the silver and army appropriation bills, also the resolution removing General Beauregard's disabilities. Confirmations. Joseph J. Brady, second assistant postmaster general; William C. Spruance, district attorney for Delaware; Thomas H. Shannon, collector of customs, San Francisco. Also the following, for appointment, by transfer, to the Seventh Cavalry: Second Lieutenants William H. Robinson, Jr., Daniel C. Pearson, Charles B. Schofield, George F. Chase, John R. Wilkinson, Ezra B. Fuller, George O. Eaton, Edwin P. Andrews, J. W. C. Graham, Hugh L. Scott, L. S. McCormick and Albert J. Knasell. Also, George F. Talbot, solicitor of the treasury, vice Blufford Wilson. Committee Work. The Banking and Currency Committee

(CONTINUED ON FOURTH PAGE.)

Golden drawing, no seed, no harvest. Golden drawing, no seed, no harvest. Golden drawing, no seed, no harvest.