Maud Voorheis, 2, No. 238 Ottawa street, scarlet fever.

JUDGE NOT TOO HASTILY.

And let not folk in judging trust their wit. Too fast, as one who contends up the corn in a field before the sun has risen it. For I have all through winter seen a thorn appearing poisonous and obdurate. Which then the rose upon the spring hath borne.

And I have seen a ship, that swift and straight, Run upon a wild sea all her race. And perished entering at the harbor gate.

THE GLASS HEARTS.

There was once a king and queen who had three beautiful daughters, and the youngest of these three princesses was remarkable for their each being furnished with a heart of glass.

"Children, children," said the queen, when the princesses were still quite small, "whenever you do, take care of your hearts, for they are of fragile make."

The children therefore tried to be very careful, and for some time all went well, and the hearts remained unbroken.

But one day the eldest girl, who was leaning out of the window, looking down into the garden below, noticed a little bee which was buzzing busily around some flowers.

There came a sound of broken glass! The young princess had crushed a bee heart against the window sill, and so, alas! the poor girl expired.

After this exceedingly sad accident the other two sisters were still more careful about their hearts.

Some time after the death of the princess, the second daughter very thoughtfully drank a cup of rather hot coffee, and when she had it finished something was suddenly heard to crack, and she fell back fainting into an armchair.

The second in this manner, however, was not so good as the first. The princess, when she awoke, found that she was lying on the floor, and that her heart of glass was broken.

When the youngest princess heard these words she jumped three times about a yard above the road for very joy, and then, turning around, ran better skitter back to the town and presented herself at the palace in less than no time.

The king at once ordered the princess to be called, and when she arrived he asked her whether this young glazier took her fancy.

The princess glanced at the young man, and recognizing him at once, she blushed and said, "Oh, yes."

The king ordered the young fellow to take off his gloves and show his hands, so that they might know whether he was of noble birth. However, the princess said that it was quite unnecessary for the young man to do anything of the kind, as she had perfectly certain that there was no doubt whatever of his being of noble birth, and that his hands, she was sure, would be as white as those of a prince.

So they were married, and as the young princess' husband was a glazier by profession as well as a nobleman by birth, he understood how to treat a heart so delicate and fragile as hers, therefore she lived blissfully to the end of her days without any accident happening.

The king's second daughter, with the cracked heart, had the pleasure of being an aunt, and a very excellent aunt she made too! She taught the little princess to read and write and make dresses for her dolls; she also took a great interest in the little princess' lessons, and when he knew them well and had good marks, like a good little boy, then she would praise him and make him all sorts of pretty presents, and he would leave her looking red and rosy and flushed with delight.

When, on the contrary, he did not know his lessons and his marks were anything but good, then she would be very different, and he would leave her looking almost very red and rosy, very flushed, but not with delight.

This princess lived to a very old age, notwithstanding that her heart was cracked, and if any one marvelled at her living so long, she would answer them as she had done her parents once before: "Remember, it's the cracked pitcher that goes on best to the well!"—Strand Magazine.

Among the royal pages in the palace was one whose term as page was shortly to expire. He had still to carry the train of the youngest princess three times, and after that he was to be promoted to a full blown courtier.

On the first occasion when the page had to carry the young princess' train she glanced at him, and as their eyes met she blushed. When next he carried her train she waved her hand to him at parting, and the unfortunate youth was unable to sleep the whole of that night in consequence!

The third time when the young fellow bore the princess' train the king came forward to meet them half way and dismissed the page, saying: "You have done your duty now, young man, and you may go. I thank you, and have also to congratulate you on your promotion."

With that the king turned and walked away, while the princess bent forward to where the page stood, and said: "You carried my train so beautifully—better than any one else! Oh, why are you not a king and a glazier?"

The unfortunate young man felt so confused, as well as delighted, that he was unable to utter a word in reply. He managed, however, to make a very graceful and polite bow. When the princess had left him he ran as hard as ever he could to the nearest glazier, and asked him whether he was in need of a foreman.

"Yes," replied the other, "but you will have to work four years with me before you can be foreman. At first you must be a sort of errand boy, and go to the baker's to fetch me my bread, and also to look after my children, wash them and dress them. Secondly, you must learn to putty the cracks; thirdly, you will have to learn how to cut the glass and fix in windows, and after that, in the fourth year, you shall be my foreman."

The page thought this would take rather too long, so he asked the glazier whether he could not possibly begin with cutting the glass and fixing windows, and leave out the rest so as to go on quicker. But the glazier shook his head and assured the young fellow that every good glazier had to begin his career from the beginning or he could never be clever. So the page was obliged to reconcile himself to his fate.

The whole of the first year the unfortunate young courtier spent his time in running to the baker's for bread for his master and in washing and dressing the children. In the second year he did nothing but stop cracks with putty. In the third year he learned how to cut glass and fix windows, and at last at the commencement of the fourth year he was made foreman.

After having been foreman for a whole year he took leave of his master and, dressing himself up once more in court dress, he walked along the roads in deep thought, wondering how he could possibly become a king. As he was walking on a man came toward him and seeing that the young courtier was in deep thought he stopped and asked him whether he had lost anything.

"Well, I don't know that I have exactly lost anything, but at any rate I cannot find what I want."

"And what is that?"

"A kingdom. I am wondering how on earth I can become a king."

"But what are the two conditions?"

"That is just exactly what I am!" exclaimed the other. "I have only lately been foreman to a glazier."

"Then you have nothing to fear. You are no doubt aware that our king decided some time ago to give his youngest daughter in marriage to a glazier who was to be at the same time a king or at any rate a prince; but as they have been unsuccessful in finding such a person, the king has been reluctantly obliged to modify his demands by adding two other conditions. The bridegroom must in any case be a glazier, that of course goes without saying."

"But what are the two conditions?" asked the young courtier excitedly.

"The first condition is that he should please the princess, and the second is that he should be a nobleman by birth. There has already been a great number of glaziers applying at the palace, but not one of them took the princess' fancy and all of them had coarse, rough hands like those of the commonest glazier."

When our young courtier heard these words he jumped three times about a yard above the road for very joy, and then, turning around, ran better skitter back to the town and presented himself at the palace in less than no time.

The king at once ordered the princess to be called, and when she arrived he asked her whether this young glazier took her fancy.

The princess glanced at the young man, and recognizing him at once, she blushed and said, "Oh, yes."

The king ordered the young fellow to take off his gloves and show his hands, so that they might know whether he was of noble birth. However, the princess said that it was quite unnecessary for the young man to do anything of the kind, as she had perfectly certain that

A MAN OF BUSINESS

Talk With Keyes, the Well Known Chicagoan.

One of Most Enterprising and Yet Most Conservative.

Experience in Commercial and Private Life in the World's Fair City.

No business man in Chicago stands higher, says the Post of that city, than Mr. D. H. Keyes of the well known firm of Keyes & Thatcher.

Mr. Keyes is very wealthy, and his holdings of the city real estate are large, but while he is one of the most conservative men in town.

"Upward of thirty years," says Mr. Keyes, "I have been engaged in active business in this city, having come here from the good old state of Vermont. At the age of 31 I found myself completely broken down, poisoned by sewer gas, full of malaria, followed by slow and persistent blood poisoning; nervous prostration was the result, and I was compelled to leave my business. I traveled from Chicago to the Pacific coast and back again to the Atlantic, visiting there and there, wherever I could find good medical attendance, sleeping sanitariums, water cures and health resorts of every kind, and yet with all the effort I found that unless I was constantly under medical surveillance I had no faith in the ultimate result.

"I was almost insane from the loss of sleep; almost every known remedy I had tried with but little good effect. The most diligent attention which I paid to my health and the outlay of thousands of dollars only procured for me the faint hope that I might grow at least a little better.

"It has been four years since I began the struggle for the retaining of my health, and in all that time I can honestly say that nothing has proved of such great benefit to me as Paine's Celery Compound. Since I began to use it I sleep very well and have regained a healthy color and am in excellent flesh.

"I attribute my present condition to the use of the compound. Mr. Keyes' experience, says the Post, is like that of thousands of others who have taken Paine's celery compound. It made him well!

It is a scientific, common sense remedy that cures disease. It is the result of the life's study and experience of one of the ablest physicians of his day. Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M. D., LL. D., of Dartmouth College.

It is no patent medicine; it is not a saraparilla; it is not a bitters or mere tonic; it is not an ordinary nerve— it is as far beyond them all as the moon is superior to the cheap glass.

Mr. E. J. Shaw of 518 Austin avenue says he first commenced using the compound about three months ago.

"I am now using the second bottle," he writes to the Post, "and I am candid when I say I have received more benefit from these two bottles than all the doctors' prescriptions and patent medicines that I have taken for the last four years, and they have been many and varied."

"The complaints of which I have been benefited, and I may say cured, are pains in the region of the kidneys and bearing down and bloatedness after eating, rheumatic pain in the limbs, arms and muscles, from which I have suffered terribly—these pains have disappeared since I commenced using the compound. My principal trouble, though, is what the doctors call locomotor ataxia, which they say is incurable. I have received benefit from the compound even in this disease. Before taking it I was much distressed in walking, and it took me half an hour to reach the square to reach street car; now I walk it with ease."

Margaret Spence, No. 164 North State street, adds her plain, honest testimony, says the Post, to that of hundreds of others. She finds herself a new person. She said yesterday:

"I have been suffering for the last ten years with nervous debility and chronic dyspepsia. I have doctored in London, England, and in America for all these years, but never found anything to do me much good. At the end of two weeks, after taking Paine's celery compound, I find myself a new person. I am truly glad that I came to hear about it. I shall never cease to recommend it, as I cannot say too much in its praise."

It is another Chicagoan: "I had no appetite," he says, "felt weak and nervous, and so tried the compound. After taking two bottles of Paine's celery compound I am glad to say that I feel like a new person. Two more of the family are taking it, and we recommend it to all our friends."

Prof. Phelps gave to the medical profession a celebrated remedy, which has since come to be known the world over as Paine's celery compound.

As a well-known physician in this city says: "It is the one—the best—remedy for nervous diseases known to our profession."

A $10.00 Atlas condensed and compiled in the most comprehensive and ready reference manner possible, and printed on one sheet of paper.

A large map of the world with a special Map of the United States, England and Wales, Germany and Norway and Sweden—comprehensive diagrams of mountains and rivers, an alphabetically arranged compilation describing every country in the world, and its location indexed.

On the front of this marvelous publication we have printed the LARGEST and BEST MAP of the UNITED STATES ever made on a single sheet of paper. Each state is shown in separate color, with a special transparent outline designating state and county boundaries.

It is carefully corrected to date, showing every line of railroad and all important cities and towns. It is large enough and complete enough to fully meet the demands of a student or business man. A child can, with this map, study the geography of the United States with intelligence. The reader can, with accuracy, locate the notable happenings of the day, and the merchant can lay out routes for his traveling men, or ship goods with economy.

In fact, it is a COMPLETE and ACCURATE map of the United States, 66x46 inches in size.

On the other side we have printed the library-chart of the WORLD.

A panorama of the surface of the globe, on Mercator's Projection, with its lands and water, mountains, rivers, lakes, bays, seas, and islands, all properly located and beautifully tinted by our patent process of oil colors.

Around the margin of the map we have printed statistical and descriptive matter of more value than can be found in any volume that was ever published at Three Times the Cost. The different divisions of the world are arranged by continent to show their area, form of government, chief executive, capital, and population. A series of short articles arranged alphabetically give, in a remarkably concise and comprehensive form, a description of every country or government in the world, no matter how small, together with its chief products, exports and imports, and its exact location on the map shown by our ready reference index.
