THE PASSION FOR CAMPING OUT. How the Primitive Savage Instinct in Man is Seen in His Outings. When a man spends a million or more of dollars in building a house for himself and his family he reaches the highest remove from his primitive ancestors, who knew no better shelter than a cave, a hut or a tent. Nevertheless, in spite of all our civilization, the underlying primitive longing for a freer life and a purer air, green fields and the babble of brooks is present in the mind of every one who does business in great cities.

The crowds that take their outings in the parks provided by different municipal bodies for the families of those who can only leave in the heat of the summer their sweating homes for a few hours, or at most a day, illustrate the same primitive instinct. It declares itself also in the suburban cottages that are to be found among our hills and in the village communities that are springing up on every side. It finds even a stronger primitive expression in those who leave the city to camp out for some weeks or months in tents.

historic and Biblical life, and it enables them to hold close communion with nature, to feel the soft yielding of the grass and to stand face to face if not with "the forest primeval," yet with woods where it is pleasant to wander among their cool, green nooks and their flickering lights and shadows. It is an axiom that there is in all of us some remains of the savage—in the Englishman, who, during his sojourn in the country, wants "to go out and hill something," and in the American in the Adirondacks, half of whose delight in that primitive wilderness is the opportunity it offers him for hunting and fishing.

There is a little doubt of the healthfulness of "camping out" as of its cheapness. Many of these "campers" are not actuated by those religious feelings which draw large bodies of men and women together at the recurrence of the summer season. They have been led into it by the freedom of an open air life—the old primitive instinct—and by the ease of an existence reduced to a cooking stove, a few chairs, and the necessary beds.

The charm of camping out amid grass and trees consists in bringing down the wants of life to their first principles, modified only by the civilizing influence of the age in which we live. Its further charm is in its contrasts and simplicity when compared with the complex exactions of cities. Thousands of things that were luxuries to the older generation have become the necessities of their children.

That is one reason why tent life around Baltimore has not died out since the old Wesleyan times, but remains a survival of the Methodist camp meeting with modifications. Other cities may offer attractions more novel, but with us the campers say the love of the canvas village is increasing. There are thousands who are making them their summer homes, some during the month of August only, and many from the first of July to the last of September.

The primitive instinct is manifest in this kind of life, although our people are no longer cave dwellers or builders of rude huts, and instead of the tents of skins of the Goths and Huns, or the camel's hair tents of the Bedouins, they shelter themselves beneath the cotton duck of the present day.—Baltimore American.

A Little Misd.

Host—Take a little before you go, Jones! Jones (after helping himself)—Thanks. May I pour you out some? Host—Please—not too much. I'm no hog. Just about half what you've given yourself.—Puck.

Not So Very Queer.

"I heard a queer story about that mountain over yonder from your native driver today." "What was that?" "A young lady and gentleman went out for a walk on that hill; they went up higher and higher, and—never came back again." "Dear me! what became of the happy pair?" "They went down on the other side."—White Mountain Echo.

The Same.

"How is the coffee today?" inquired Mrs. Hashem. "I don't think," replied Billy Bliven, as he looked critically into his cup, "that its condition has changed materially since yesterday."—Washington Star.

Authority for It.

Mrs. Peary—Do you think the silver displayed by the Flashmans last night was solid? Mrs. Lender—I know it. Most of it has been in my family over fifty years.—Jeweler's Weekly.

The Wrong Kind.

Physicians

frequently state: "We know that Port Wine is the best tonic for the weak, nervous and debilitated, and for such troubles as exhaustion, weakness, sleeplessness, etc., there is no medicine to compare with it; yet we fear to prescribe it, for there are so many adulterations on the market."

There is a brand called "Royal Ruby" Port Wine, so called for its royal taste and ruby color, it is pure and old and has that fruity taste that no other wine has. Druggists sometimes urge that which they have in bulk; why? More profit of course. Royal Ruby port wine is guaranteed by the undersigned to be absolutely pure and over five years old, or money paid for it will be refunded. Quarts $1.00; pints 50 cts. Sold and guaranteed by White & White, Thum Bros. and Schmidt, leading druggists. Bottled by Royal Wine Co., Chicago.
