For instance, in the western edge of Washington, near the coast, is the remnant of a herd of cattle which for years has remained through the woods and over the prairie there.

Long ago a military post was maintained on Gray's harbor, and adjacent was a large amount of cleared land, cultivated by soldiers as a farm.

The troop owned a good many cattle, which pastured on a part of the garden ranch. For some reason or other the post was abandoned and the soldiers found it impossible to take their cattle with them.

So the animals were left there, and since there were no settlers in the vicinity to look after them the herd grew wild.

In spite of the fact that the heavy forest afforded but a small amount of pasture, and notwithstanding the depredations of black wolves, which then infested the woods along the coast, the cattle increased in numbers very rapidly and were a constant annoyance to early settlers.

Fences were broken down, crops were destroyed and tame cattle coaxed off to the woods. Many of the animals were killed by parties organized to exterminate them, and the remainder of the herd was driven into the skirts of the Olympics and into the coast range south and east of Gray's harbor.

But every now and then the hunter for elk, which abound in these mountains, comes upon a bunch of wild cattle almost as fleet as the deer.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

FATALISM IN RUSSIA. Perhaps It Is No Wonder That Russians Suffer from Fatalism and Pessimism.

The Russian peasant is like a child, ignorant of the practical bearings of events, and utterly unable to cope with them. Yet he never loses his faith in God.

During the famine, when the peasantry were living, or rather dying, on bread made of pigweed, chaff and other equally nutritious and more nutritious articles, they endured in submission "God's will is at the bottom of it," said they. "He gave and He takes away."

A writer in Temple Bar gives the following illustration of their fatalism, and the excuses they invariably find for inaction:

One day, a Russian village official was riding with me in search of some stray dogs. The black soil was like dust, and he sighed heavily as his mare sank in the light silt.

"Ah," he said, "what land is this? It is like a woman broken with sorrow. How can she find food for her child?"

"Has it been so all summer?" I asked. "Not so, indeed. There was frost in the spring, and men said 'frost and fair weather.' But then came the dryness, and though mass was said in the fields, it went to nothing. And then we dug up the drunkards—"

"The what?" "The drunkards, your honor. Often it is that when the drunkards are pulled out of their graves, and flung into pools of water, that rain will come; we know not why. But not only rain came, but hail and fierce storms and fire, and withered the little that was grown. Then after that, dryness again, and now," he shrugged his shoulders, "the famine."

"Must there be famine?" I asked. "Surely," he said, with a smile, "the grain we have is soon eaten, and then what?"

"Will no provision be made for the future?" "Who should make provision? Now we can buy much and eat much; afterwards, well, the little father will not see us die!"

So depending on the czar and public charity, they rest content in making no provision for the future.

THE AMERICAN SOLDIER. In Discontent and Suffering He Is the True Man and Hero.

To know the American soldier well you must tell with him, over the desert trail when the sun beats hotly down on the dry and veridulous earth, and the dust rises in white clouds that hide the column from view, and fills the eyes, the mustache, the ears, the mouth with profanity and vexation. Here, says Harper's Weekly, is where the songs and jokes proclaim the stuff that he is made of.

Then, when you are sent out with him in the dead of winter over twenty inches of snow, your equipment and supplies on bob sleds, he it is that dismounts time and again without a murmur, pushing, to help the aches up hill, and replacing the overturned sled a dozen times in a day; then, after it all, digging his hole in the snow and putting up his tent at night, all the time joking with his "Bunkie," and ready as ever to steal a whisp of hay or a handful of oats for his shivering horse. He it is that jumped into the boiling hot spring to save the daughter of a private citizen—a deed for which the citizen, who was a rich man, proffered the astounding sum of five dollars, and the government the gold medal of honor; he it was that took a flat-bottomed boat out in a heavy sea in New York harbor to rescue a drowning boy; that lost his life for his fidelity while attempting to swim in icy stream with dispatches, who, single handed, served a field gun through an action with a bullet in his leg, to hold a position; he that you believe incapable of anything but "bucking fare" and drinking strong liquors.

GREEN TEA. Some Interesting Facts Concerning One of Our Popular Teas.

Tea is a plant that grows in China, Japan and other parts of the world. There are two varieties, thea nigra and thea viridis—black and green tea. The same plant produces both kinds. Green tea is made by one kind of treatment, black tea by another. The shrub, says the Detroit Free Press, is raised from seed like hazel nuts, planted in nurseries. It is set out when about a foot high, lives for fifteen or twenty years and grows sometimes as tall as six feet. It is picked four times a year. The first picking is the best when the leaves are covered with a whitish down. This is in April, the next in May, the next in July, the last in August. One Chinaman can pick about thirteen pounds of leaves per day, for which he receives sixty cash, or six cents. The green leaves are spread out on bamboo frames to dry a little, the yellow and old defective leaves are picked out, then they take up a handful of the leaves, cast them in a heated pan, get them warmed up and squeeze out the superfluous juice; this juice contains an acid oil, so acid as to irritate the hands of the workmen. Then they dry them slightly in the sun; then every separate leaf is rolled up into a little ball like a tooth; then they throw these green tea shot into a pan slightly heated, stirring them up so as to warm every part alike; then they cool the tea, and the shot is picked out one by one, the best for the first or finest chop. Then it is packed.

A HANGING EXPERIENCE.

The Sensations as Described by a Kansas Man.

"I was hanged for a horse thief once," said F. H. Stephens, a contractor hailing from the Sunflower state, to a Globe-Democrat man. "It was just after the war. Stock thieves were pretty thick, and when caught were not allowed to waste much time repenting of their sins. I had just moved into the state from Michigan. I bought a horse, a regular old plow to be all right, and the next day mounted him and started to Fort Scott to transact some business.

"I had ridden perhaps a dozen miles when I was overhauled by a posse of armed men who were hunting stock thieves. The horse I was riding had been stolen from a member of the party, and I was swung up to the limb of a tree by the roadside without being given a chance to explain. There was a sharp, momentary pain, a choking sensation, succeeded by one that I can only compare to the delightful intoxication of the opium smoker, and then unconsciousness. I would like to experience that sensation again, but do not care to undergo the necessary preliminaries. The party concluded that I might have confederates, and let me down, hoping that I would perish.

"The coming back to life was a good deal more painful than taking leave of it. When I got so I could talk I told my story, but it was not believed, and they were about to swing me up again, when a neighbor, returning from Fort Scott, chanced along and convinced them that they had the wrong man."

PEOPLE OF EASTERN PERU.

The Montana of South America and Its Inhabitants.

Eastern Peru, though changing its political title at various periods, has been called the Montana or wooded country since the first colony was planted there, two hundred and fifty years ago, says a writer in Harper's Weekly. The experiences of the early settlers were an endless succession of romantic adventures. Towns were built and destroyed many times, and there is scarcely a single site which has not been bathed with the blood of white and Indian through centuries of conflict.

Spain and Peruvian possession of this territory was consequently been more nominal than real until within the last twenty years, during which time several of the old mission stations have flourished forth into cities of from two thousand to six thousand inhabitants under the commercial stimulus given by the opening of the Amazon to the flags of all nations in 1866.

Accordingly the majority of the pure whites now living in the Montana are either Peruvians originally from the west coast or Germans, French and English, with two or three Americans, who have been allured to this remote corner of the globe by the prospect of speedily amassing fortunes in the rubber trade. These new comers are often noble examples of manhood, full of that courage and determination which are needed in establishing governments and commercial prosperity in the midst of a soloncel and sometimes treacherous native population. Women of apparently equal rank are, however, conspicuously absent.

INDIAN ETIQUETTE.

Curious Tale of an Invitation to the Maharajah Gwalior.

A curious incident was brought to notice in connection with the recent marriage of the heir-apparent of the Jeddapore state. It appears that, according to the custom in vogue among native chieftains, a khairita of invitation to the royal wedding was ordered to be sent to the maharajah of Gwalior. The official who wrote the khairita did not know the mode of addressing the ruling chief of Scindia, and, therefore, referred to old records of the state, in which the name of the late grandfather of the present chief was mentioned. The official copied it word for word and sent it off to Gwalior by a dargah. On the khairita being presented to the maharajah of Gwalior he refused to open it, saying he could not open a khairita addressed to his grandfather, who died before the mintage, and asked the man to take it to his samad three miles out of Gwalior. None of the representatives of the Gwalior state, the Bombay Gazette says, attended the wedding on this occasion.

An Unpopular Order.

Travelers who return from a visit to France tell their story of how American friends curious stories of the peculiar and attractive "odor of Paris," which is said to greet the nostrils of the tourist the moment the train deposits him in the capital and which he misses with regret when he leaves. The Parisians themselves, it appears, do not like this odor, for an enterprising firm recently brought out a new scent called "perfume of the streets" and found it unpopular.

Special Good News to the Voter.

We offer a Beautiful Bound, Handsomely Printed, Elegantly Illustrated, Copy of "The Life of Ben. Harrison, by the Author of Ben Hur" Absolutely free.

READ AND DO SOME THINKING. The voter cannot cast an intelligent Ballot unless he can appreciate the intricate manipulations of the wheels of government and become conversant to some extent at least with the fundamental facts and theories controlling the various great governmental departments, and he cannot hope to know the character of the chief executive unless he reads an Accurate and Impartial Biography, written and compiled by a Master Litterateur, equal to the difficult task.

Gen. Benjamin Harrison is a candidate for re-election. The Nation demands that the hero who led its armies in the Field, and who for four years has wisely and nobly steered the ship of state shall continue to hold the helm and guide our Nation through the perils of the future as ably as he has through those of the past. He who during the administration has saved the country from a series of threatening dangers, has brought Italy and Chile to the feet of our Republican throne, and made even England yield to American demands in the Behring Sea difficulty, is the man for the people of these United States.

Gen. Lew Wallace, who is known throughout the United States as one of the most intimate personal friends of President Harrison, and as having had a great deal to do with his re-nomination, has written a biography of the President, which reads like a veritable Romance, yet is Accurate History. The book has been officially authorized and contributed to by the heads of the government in Articles regarding the workings of the Republican policy and the Present administration. These distinguished contributors include Hon. William E. Curtis, Hon. John Wanamaker, Hon. Jeremiah Rusk, Secretary Foster and Hon. Eugene Hale. Their topics include commercial Reciprocity, Postal Service, Progress of the Public Domain, etc.

When General Harrison was asked his choice of a biographer he promptly replied, "My life-long friend, General Wallace." His chief advisors, interpreting the President's desire, have officially supplied the volume with most valuable contributions.

The Book is a Monument to Skill and Fidelity. We offer it free with three months' subscription to THE HERALD. The book sells for $1.50, and thousands of copies have been and are being sold. We are desirous of having such a book, brim full as it is of information of vital importance to the voter, in every home in Western Michigan. It will be referred to oftener than a dictionary, and will be read with more pleasure than a novel.
