Calling Out British Reserves.
That the British war office has at last felt the necessity of calling out the reserves to fill the depleted ranks of the army in South Africa is made plain by a late London cablegram. The knowledge that this unusual measure was contemplated came out somewhat sooner than was expected and in an unexpected way, but it no less clearly reveals the purpose and dire necessity of the government.

According to the London cable, "the war office distributed to the police offices throughout the kingdom bills ordering all reservists, militia, yeomen and volunteers to report themselves without delay to headquarters from the view of active service. These bills are accompanied by letters ordering that the former be kept in a safe place until telegraphic orders to post them up are received. The police of Lancaster overlooked the letter and posted the bills, causing widespread perturbation."

The posting of the order might possibly have been deferred for a few days or even a few weeks, but it has generally been recognized in England that it must come to this sooner or later. So unpopular has the war become that it is now next to impossible to recruit by voluntary enlistment the army in South Africa, which is being decimated by disease and Boer bullets.

The extent of Great Britain's continuous losses may be gathered from the official report for September, 1901, which shows that 24 officers and 383 men died in South Africa during the first month of the third year of the war. Of this number 17 officers and 170 men were killed in action, 3 officers and 139 men died of disease, while accidental deaths accounted for the loss of 1 officer and 23 men. Besides this there must be figured in to tell the cost of the campaign 14 officers and 400 men accounted for as missing and prisoners and 60 officers and 1,926 men who were sent home as invalids. This brings the total of September's losses to 2,806—90 officers, 2,710 enlisted men. From the beginning of the war up to Oct. 1, 1901, there have been 824 officers and 16,648 men who have died in South Africa. Of this number 4,757 were killed in action, 1,623 died of wounds, 97 died in captivity, 10,550 died of disease and 445 deaths are credited to accidental causes. Besides this 620 are either missing or prisoners and 57,470 have been sent home as invalids. Of this number 423 have died and 3,774 have left the service unfit for further work.

With such losses as these and no counterbalancing gains, with the campaign well along in the third year and the end, which was long ago promised and time and again reasserted, not yet in sight, it is no wonder that England is becoming tired of the terrible drain upon her manhood and resources.

It is asserted that a few colleges have discovered that the way to stop hazing is to suspend the hazers. There is a simple way to effectually stop it, if the colleges would adopt the method, and that is to treat the hazers just the same as other disorderly persons who commit assaults. Arraignment in criminal court and the infliction of fine and imprisonment would have a decidedly sobering and salutary effect on these obstreperous young men.

The fastest battleship in actual service in the world is of American build and belongs to Russia. The Retvizan has averaged 18.8 knots for twelve hours' continuous steaming. This is highly creditable to the shipbuilders, but since this country is able to build the best battleships why shouldn't this country own the best battleships in the world?

According to the reports of the United States fish commission, the lobster industry is on the decline owing to a continual decrease in the natural supply. We had not observed any considerable decrease in the natural supply of certain varieties of lobster in this locality.

Mrs. Martha Foote Crow, dean of the woman's department at Northwestern university, has declared against "the indecencies of a sorority initiation." But why shouldn't the college girls have some parallel barbarity to the masculine diversion of hazing?

Pat Crowe has offered to surrender under certain conditions. When he contemplates the nerve of the Bulgarian brigands, he doubtless feels that he is a "no account" sort of brigand and a disgrace to the profession.

President Roosevelt seems to have been somewhat remiss in failing to express his gratitude to those amiable newspaper correspondents who have been outlining his message for him.

The museum of Stuttgart has presented to the American Museum of Natural History an ichthyosaurus quadriscissus. But there is no occasion to get frightened; it is not alive.

A Wisconsin tramp drank a quart of whisky and died soon after from its effects. And yet there are people who insist that whisky is a bad thing to have around.

At any rate there will be enough testimony in the Schley case to go around.

The Valley Forge Movement.
It is creditable to the American people that monuments and memorial tablets have been erected on most of the important battlefields where American blood was shed during the war for independence. The valor displayed at Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Yorktown and elsewhere has been fittingly commemorated in granite or in marble. Not until a few days ago, however, was a monument erected on that historic ground where the Revolutionary soldiers did not fight the British, but where they fought against cold, hunger and disease, suffering greater losses than in many of the pitched battles in which they were engaged.

If Washington's little army had not held together at Valley Forge, there probably would have been no "crowning grace" of Yorktown; hence the Daughters of the Revolution quite properly selected the anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis as the day for the unveiling of the shaft built with money raised by them in memory of the Revolutionary soldiers who died at Valley Forge during that dreary winter of 1777-78.

It is hardly creditable to the country that the site of that winter campaign, which counted for so much in the history of the Revolution, should have been so long neglected.

There is a very general public sentiment that Valley Forge should be preserved as a public park. A proposition was advanced in the Pennsylvania legislature a few years ago to make it a state park, but nothing came of it. Last year a bill was introduced in congress to establish a national park at Valley Forge, but it did not pass. It is hoped that the erection of this monument may awaken patriotic public interest in Pennsylvania and elsewhere in the movement to preserve this historic site.

Hall Caine in Politics.

The campaign of Hall Caine, who is running for member of the Manx parliament in behalf of the town of Ramsey, Isle of Man, will be watched with interest wherever the works of this strenuous novelist are read. His platform is characteristically radical. First of all, Mr. Caine wants to nationalize the steamship service connecting the Isle of Man with England, running it without profit.

Then he applies himself to the Manx steam and street railroads and would furnish the same radical system to them. Land must be treated in a somewhat similar manner, the Manx parliament controlling the drainage, cultivation and tree planting. The banks, of course, are included in this nationalization scheme, by which Mr. Caine believes that such financial scandals as occurred in the Isle of Man last year would be avoided. Mr. Caine points out that the primary factor in Manx prosperity is the island's popularity as a holiday resort and that it must prosper or decline as it meets the needs of the visitors.

The injection of so much dynamic force as that represented by Hall Caine's personality and works into a single body as small as the Manx parliament could hardly fail to be followed by interesting results. The legislative proceedings would themselves take on something of the character of the most dramatic of his novels.

A remarkable duel with sabers has taken place near Leghorn between Lieutenant Riviera of the artillery and Signor Ferini. They fought seventy-two rounds, and, although actually slashing and thrusting at one another for an hour and forty minutes, they both escaped with slight cuts. American prizefighters would be ashamed of themselves if they did not do better execution than that.

The theft of $74,610 worth of stamps from the vault of the wholesale department of the Chicago postoffice is the largest stamp robbery ever committed in this country. The crime resembles in some particulars the recent robbery of a smelter in California and suggests considerable familiarity with the premises on the part of the thieves.

There is living in Portland, Me., a man named Marcus A. Hanna. The remarkable thing about it is that he has never tried to utilize the coincidence in name with that of a distinguished Ohio statesman as an argument to secure an office.

Secretary Long estimates that $98,910,384 will be required for extending the navy and maintaining it during the fiscal year 1903, an increase over last year's naval appropriations of $21,000,000. Why not make it an even hundred million?

Inventors would do well to turn their attention to the production of a bullet proof coat for the use of deer and moose hunters. Five men have been killed and nearly a score wounded thus far this season in the Maine woods.

The Anglo-Saxon Review, which cost $5 a number, is to be given up as a failure. The great mass of the Anglo-Saxon people will probably be able to get along without it.

Canada declines to recognize American divorces. That's all right. The Dominion can't be blamed for wanting to protect home industry.

Brakes Needed For The Middle Aged

By Dr. I. N. LOVE
Of New York

One approaches the middle milestone in life he must adjust himself to changing conditions. He must then, if ever, realize the importance of elimination, OF EATING LESS AND WORKING LESS. In other words, as he advances along down the hill of life he should cultivate an ability to put on the brakes, be satisfied to do less work, but better work—indeed DO LESS OF EVERYTHING AND TRY TO DO IT BETTER.

You ask, When is the middle milestone reached?

It varies in different individuals. It ranges from the fortieth to the sixtieth birthday. Some men by inheritance and others by habits of life have moved more rapidly than others toward this point. It has been said that a woman is as old as she looks and a man as old as he feels, but as a matter of fact both are as old as their arteries. In other words, the elasticity of their arteries and other parts of their structures is an expression of their youthfulness.

On general principles one at this time should make no radical change in the habits of living.

IT IS A GREAT MISTAKE TO ATTEMPT TO REDUCE RAPIDLY AN ACCUMULATION OF FAT WHICH IS THE RESULT OF YEARS OF EXCESSIVE EATING AND LACK OF PROPER EXERCISE.

A man of 50 should limit his diet to almost half what it was when he was 30 or during the growing period. He should drink large quantities of water, for water is the greatest eliminator of accumulating poisons. If you would wish to wash out the earthy materials which tend toward stiffness and brittleness of the arteries and joints, use the greatest solvent of earthy salts we have—namely, PURE WATER.

A judicious amount of exercise should be indulged in. Excessive athleticism is always objectionable to the young and the old as well. Free indulgence in walking out in the open air is excellent. The city streets will do for this. Horseback riding is good. All of these should be indulged temperately and the increase gradual.

Temperance in all things is the great essential. Radical abstinence either in diet or drink is not called for, but I do believe that as we approach the middle of life the use of alcohol should be diminished rather than increased, and unless this can be done gracefully alcohol should be ruled out altogether.

A man as he approaches middle life needs some stimulant or nerve bracer. Probably tobacco, judiciously indulged, is the least harmful.

BUT IN EXCESS I BELIEVE IT IS MORE DANGEROUS THAN ALCOHOL BECAUSE IT IS MORE RESPECTABLE AND HARDER TO AVOID.

I would sum up the essentials along these lines or for this period: Cultivate temperance in all things, cheerfulness, optimism, the ability to move gracefully along the lines of least resistance, the disposition to avoid obstruction and friction, the appreciation of fun, but not frivolity, and AN EVER ABIDING LOVE FOR ALL THE WORLD.

The American Conscience Is All Right—But It's Asleep

By WAYNE MACVEAGH
Ex Attorney General of the United States

It is consoling to know that notwithstanding our failure to discharge our civic duties many of the currents of our national life flow smoothly on, for the daily and obscure labors of the vast majority of our fellow citizens continue year after year in all the different phases of our national existence.

The laborers themselves have been sowing and reaping, working steadily at the tasks appointed them, taking the sunshine and the rain, mutely enduring the sufferings and the burdens given them to bear, and acquitting themselves worthily as good men and women ought to do.

Daily confronting of the daily task and doing it with patience, contentment and courage are as true today as ever, while it is also true that the recompense of such deserving labors, while less proportionately, is actually far greater in all measures, material and spiritual, than ever before, so that after all abatement we may regard the past with abundant gratitude and the future with absolute confidence, while on the threshold of the new century it is still true that THE HAPPIEST OF POLITICAL FORTUNES IS TO BE AN AMERICAN CITIZEN, and that fortune is sure to grow happier "with the process of the suns." The present paralysis of our moral courage, our present cowardly toleration of loathsome corruption and its kindred evils, which seem to seriously threaten our peace; our present animal lust for blood, and the general degradation of the national spirit, will prove to be only temporary evils and will soon pass away, for THE AMERICAN CONSCIENCE IS NOT DEAD, BUT SLEEPETH, and, even if we do not, our children will return to the old ways and the old faith. Let me repeat once more those inspired words of the first great American: "The nation shall under God have a new birth of freedom, and government of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth."
