CELEBRATION QUITE SIMPLE

How King Oscar and Queen Sophia
Observed Their Golden Wedding Anniversary.

SWEDEN.

Stockholm.

King Oscar's and Queen Sofia's golden wedding anniversary was, to say the least, a quiet affair. Many people were disappointed because of this, but the old king wisely decided that there should be no unnecessary festivities. Says a Stockholm correspondent: "The health of the aged king did not permit him to take part in any public functions of exacting character, and the queen has never been a friend of public functions, having lived a retired life for many years. The announced royal visitors from abroad therefore did not arrive, and the whole affair took on a more private character. The only real celebration took place in the principal church in Stockholm, Storkyrkan (great church), which is situated close to the royal palace, and here the king, the queen and the whole royal family attended by the entire court and surrounded by high officials of state, took part in a special service wherein the archbishop and several other high dignitaries of the church officiated. Afterward the whole royal family took a short drive in great state, escorted by the horse guards, through some of the principal thoroughfares, which were lined with troops and crowded with cheering masses. The drive over, the king stepped out on the balcony on the front of the palace with the queen by his side and received a tremendous ovation. The king even went so far as to make a short speech, thanking the people, and it was remarkable to notice that in spite of everything his voice had almost its old strength."

A large number of the Swedish papers have been devoting much space to the rumored engagement of Prince Wilhelm, the second son of the crown-prince, who is at present in St. Petersburg, to the Grand Duchess Maria Pavlovna. This young princess—she has just reached 17—is the daughter of the Grand Duke Paul, who is an uncle of the czar. Her mother, Princess Alexandra, a daughter of King George of Greece, died about fifteen years ago. The young princess has been educated mostly in Paris. The explanation of why this rumor had suddenly arisen is that the news of Prince Wilhelm's journey to the Russian court only transpired after he had gone. A secret journey like that always gives rise to speculations. Impossible, of course, it is not, but if it proves true, the betrothal can not be regarded as having any political importance. Prince Wilhelm will embark within a few days for his American tour. His fiancée, the Grand Duchess Maria Pavlovna, will receive an income from a dower of 200,000 rubles (about $100,000). In addition she will receive a large fortune from the Grand Duchess Sergius.

The following communication accompanied by a draft of 100,000 crowns was sent to the Central Association for Social Progress: "To the executive committee of the central association: Appreciating the great importance of social and philanthropic progress in our land, we desire to show our deep interest and sympathy and we therefore submit as a gift $100,000 crowns for this worthy purpose. Our wish is that this sum shall be known as a special fund, the interest of which shall go to the maintenance of the organization. Should it be deemed necessary that a part of this sum, not more than 20 per cent., shall be devoted to some other worthy cause, the central association shall inform either one of us and if after our death, the then reigning monarch." The communication was signed by King Oscar and Queen Sofia.

The East Asiatic Steamship company passed with surprising rapidity from the dim realm of speculation to a tangible reality, thanks to the riksdag, which authorized a loan of $500,000 to the company. An equal amount will be raised as capital stock. The first steamer of the company will leave for the east in July.

The new prince, who arrived June 7, will be known as the duke of Upland. The young prince had not been in this world many hours before he received his name, as is the custom with princes. He is from now on Sigvard, Oscar Frederick, duke of Upland, and is to be called Sigvard, which is really an old Icelandic name.

Some emigration agents are said to be crowding their business with a vigor that is not for the best interests of the country and the emigrants, and the government is endeavoring to check the activity of those agents who promise more to the emigrants than they can fulfill.

Mme. Anna Hellstrom, the well known Swedish opera star, who made such a successful American tour last year, has been married to Herr Martin Oscar. She received a divorce from her former husband last year.

Mme. Betty Nansen, the wife of Dr. Nansen, at present Norway's minister to London, has been awarded "litteris et artibus" by order of the king. King Oscar went to Marstrand summer resort July 1 for a month. Queen Sofia will pass the summer at Eriksberg palace, near Norrköping.

There were 24,601 school children registered in the Stockholm public schools during the year of 1906. This year there were over 25,000.

The population of Stockholm during the latter part of December was, according to the official count, 324,488.

Adelina Patti, the Baroness Cederstrom, has arrived in Stockholm and is a guest at Grand hotel.

The latest decision of the Norwegian storting, by which the ballot will be given to 300,000 Norwegian women, including for them the right to become members of the Norwegian parliament has caused no end of comment throughout the country. The following extract from a letter of the Norwegian correspondent, S. C. Hammer, to the Minneapolis Journal, explains the bill passed in full: "The Norwegian storting at a sitting June 15 passed a bill on woman suffrage by which the number of electors will be increased by 300,000. By this decision Norwegian women who have a yearly income of 400 kroner (about $100) in town, or 300 kroner in the country, or are married to men who have such incomes, can vote and be elected at the general elections for the storting. A proposal that women should receive universal suffrage as is the case with men, was rejected, and the bill passed in conformity with the rules laid down in the woman suffrage municipality bill passed some years ago. The question of woman suffrage was raised in Norway in 1886, at a time when men had not yet obtained universal suffrage. A proposal that women should obtain suffrage on the same conditions as men then enjoyed received forty-four votes, while fifteen members of the storting voted for introducing universal suffrage for women and men at once. After this honorable defeat, the question of suffrage for women has never been dropped, and year by year it has increased in strength. In 1895, for instance, a proposal of universal suffrage for women obtained thirty-three votes in the storting. In 1901 women obtained suffrage in municipal affairs, the qualification being put down at 400 kroner a year in town and 300 kroner in the country for unmarried women and for those who are married to men having the said income. As the storting wanted to obtain some experience as to this reform, the woman suffrage bill (in state affairs) was put off for some time. The satisfactory way in which women have used their municipal suffrage and their patriotic position in 1905 when they pronounced their approval of the dissolution of the union with Sweden by a private vote which showed a total of about 278,000, have at last paved the way for the reform. The bill was passed by 96 votes against 25, two being absent. The galleries of the storting were filled with women who, on the president's announcement of the vote, broke forth in cheers, which were, however, speedily stopped by the president's gavel. All the women's societies are naturally enraptured and congratulatory telegrams and meetings are everywhere reported."

The Norwegian-American singing society "Dovre," which has given a series of successful concerts in Christiania, serenaded King Haakon a week ago last Monday evening at the Victoria villa. The king thanked them very cordially in a neat little speech.

The Normandsforbund, comprising Norwegians all over the world, was organized in Christiania last Friday evening. The society already has 40,000 members and 300 branch societies. Storting's President Berner was chosen chairman of the organization.

The storting during its last session voted $100,000 for the purchase of waterfalls in Numedalen. This will prove to be a great business impetus for this section of the country.

Hotel Victoria of Stavanger has been sold to Hans Nilsen for 295,000 crowns. It will now be completely renovated and will be reopened in the near future as a tourist hotel.

Mme. Magna Lykseth-Schervenp, the Norwegian prima donna, has received the "litteris et artibus" decoration from King Oscar.

DENMARK.

Copenhagen.

Says the Politiken: "Governor General Gerhard is in favor of enacting laws against praising unlawful deeds, which is not punishable at the present time. For this purpose he has asked for advice from the procurator, who has drawn up an opinion on the matter, explaining that at the time of the enactment of the penal law such expressions were extremely rare in Finland, and in case they were intended for publication they were suppressed by the press censors. The procurator further states that most of the modern penal laws of other countries expressly prohibit the praising of lawless deeds, and he finally says that he agrees with the governor general that the laws of Finland might well be completed in this respect."

Danish students are beginning to imitate our energetic American students. This summer we find many of them seeking employment out in the country as farm hands, assisting in the haying, etc. Formerly it used to be considered beneath the dignity of a Danish student to work in the meadow or the harvest field.

A telegram from the Danish capital states that a rumor is afloat announcing the engagement of Princess Thyra to Emperor William's third son, Prince Adelbert.
