

Liquid Delight

Everyone seems agreed that for every quality that goes to make soda water good our soda water is pre-eminent. It is not only good but the most delightfully perfect soda. A cold draught of such deliciousness that you would not exchange it for the fabled nectar.

It's so different from soda water as commonly served as to seem another beverage, yet it costs just the same as you have paid for the insipid kind.

Dr. Armitage's sideburns seem to be responsible for scaring one of Will Scheller's horses and causing it to turn a somersault over a barbed-wire fence between here and Milaca. Doc was proceeding in his automobile at a low rate of speed along the public highway when the horse espied him and performed the contortion act above mentioned. 'Twas evidently not the automobile which scared the horse, for the animal had met red devils frequently and paid no attention to them. The animal was also acquainted with the doctor before he cultivated alfalfa on the sides of his face. Hence the reason for the horse's peculiar maneuvers can be attributed only to the marked change in his facial appearance.

Professor Austin and wife will leave on Saturday for New Prague and there make their permanent residence. Mr. Austin will enter the New Prague roller mills for the purpose of becoming familiar with and later engaging in the milling business. Princeton never had a superintendent of its public schools who proved a better educator or was better liked than Professor Austin. He introduced new and improved methods into the schools, systemized every department and worked assiduously for the advancement of his pupils. In the departure of Prof. Austin Princeton loses a good public servant and it is to be deplored that he sees fit to resign his charge. Mrs. Austin will also be greatly missed. She was always ready to tender her services as a musician upon all church or other entertainments for the public good and is a general social favorite.
