Our good old friend, Hon. Daniel Anderson, formerly of Cambridge, writes us from Coronado, Cal., that southern California is probably the most comfortable place in the United States to live in, on account of its uniform and moderate climate. But he thinks the politics of that state are bum. The progressives, he says, have gone to extremes in reforming the state. "I wish," he writes, "I could be in Minnesota during the present campaign where I could meet some of my own class to talk with. Here there seems to be no middle class—it is the capitalistic class and those whom they control, and the other extreme, socialists and labor unions. I am enjoying good health but feel somewhat lonesome." We sincerely hope Mr. Anderson will continue to enjoy good health for many long years to come.
