We were all wondering what was the matter with W. Alberts one day last week because he looked so pale and rattled but finally the reason leaked out. The young folks had planned a surprise on him and when the crowd arrived all the young ladies invaded his bachelor quarters, and the gentlemen remained outside. Of course any bachelor would get excited under such conditions. Later the gentlemen entered and a good time was had by all.

Quite a number of friends sprung a pleasant surprise on Mr. and Mrs. L. Slaughter last Monday evening and a social evening was spent and light refreshments were served. The Slaters have sold their farm and expect to load a car of household goods at Long Siding next Wednesday and remove to Prinsburg, where they will retire and enjoy the fruits of their labors.

Mr. and Mrs. Emmons have the neighborhood sympathy in the loss of their barn, which burned Friday night with all his hay and corn. The chicken house with about 200 chickens burned also as did his dairy house and wind-mill. The origin of the fire is unknown and had the horses and cattle been in the barn they would have burned also as the fire had too much headway when discovered to save anything. Mr. Emmons carries an insurance with the Glendorado Insurance company, but it will only be a partial amount to cover the loss. However, they expect to rebuild at once.

Ben Jennissen came home last week. He has been buying potatoes north of here.

Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Foley entertained the social club Wednesday evening. A Hallowe'en program had been arranged by the committee and was very successfully carried out. One of the most amusing features was the ghostly appearance of about a dozen of the members, who came lamenting the death of the family pet, "The Old Black Cat," amid peals of laughter and shrieks of fright. Mementoes of the old cat were passed from one to the other. Many Hallowe'en traditions were indulged in an afforded an hour's enjoyment which will not soon be forgotten. Prof. Malm then gave a short talk on phrenology and proceeded to illustrate to the assembled guests. This again created much laughter, which was only subdued on the arrival of a lunch prepared by the hostess, after which the guests departed to fulfill in dreams all the Hallowe'en stunts performed.
