

Thousands of men have chewed Real Gravelly Chewing Plug for twenty-five years and more. And every time they have tried some other brand it made them think more of Gravelly than ever.

Profits and Prices

Profits may be considered from two angles:

- 1st—Their effect on prices;
- 2nd—As a return to investors.

When profits are small as compared with sales, they have little effect on prices.

Swift & Company's profits are only a fraction of a cent per pound on all products sold, and if eliminated entirely would have practically no effect on prices.

Swift & Company paid 10 per cent dividends to over 20,000 stockholders out of its 1917 profits. It also had to build extensions and improvements out of profits; to finance large stocks of goods made necessary by unprecedented requirements of the United States and Allied Governments; and to provide protection against the day of declining markets.

Is it fair to call this profiteering?

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

The Odd Fellows of Princeton start out well. Success to them.

The baby girl of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Murphy of Baldwin died on Monday.

Through the efforts of Postmaster Head Princeton will have direct mail connection with Foreston.

A number of Knights of Pythias of Milaca attended the special lodge meeting here on Tuesday evening.

Miss Mary Huse writes an interesting letter from California descriptive of her trip to the coast, which will be printed next week.

Tom Scheen will open his confectionery store in the Cox block next Saturday.

Dr. H. C. Cooney has been appointed a member of the pension examining board for the counties of Anoka, Sherburne and Mille Lacs. A good appointment.

The shower on Monday night was a Godsend. It will help out corn and late potatoes. Many fields of small grain in this vicinity will hardly pay for cutting. Early potatoes are a total failure.

Sunday was a scorcher and no mistake. Thermometers in the shade registered 105 degrees, and the chinook from the north caused vegetation to wither as if it had been struck by a severe frost.

D. H. Robbins, postmaster at Vineland, has had circulars printed at this office setting forth the advantages of Mille Lacs lake as a summer resort. The lake boys are doing their share toward booming Mille Lacs county.

Woodcock & Burch now have about 3,000,000 superior quality cream brick ready for shipment.

Land Opportunities.

First time offered for sale, 4,000 acre tract of timber, meadow and cut-over land, located in southwestern Aitkin county, Minnesota, within three to ten miles of Mille Lacs lake, on or convenient to good roads, schools and in a rapidly developing community. The soil is rich timber loam with clay subsoil and is very productive, especially adapted to dairying and diversified farming. Some of these lands have enough mixed hardwood timber to pay for them. These lands will be sold in tracts of 40 acres up at prices from $9 to $20 per acre, $2.00 cash and balance in five yearly payments. Can show these lands at any time from Princeton by automobile. Don't miss this opportunity to get a good piece of land at a reasonable price and on easy terms. 27-tfc Robt. H. King.

Roosevelt: Man of Destiny.

By another of those dramatic re-bounds which have punctured Mr. Roosevelt's political career at crucial moments he is again at the front, the undisputed leader of the Republican party and the idol of the aggressive, red-blooded Americanism of the country. And that, too, at a time when this same spirit which he ever has typified is dominant and stirred to its depths as it never has been before since the days when the existence of the nation hung in the balance on the battlefields of the civil war.

When Mr. Roosevelt stepped on the platform of the Saratoga convention under the pall of that tragedy which had just darkened his home, not only his own party but the people of the entire state, and of the entire country for that matter, were fairly swept off their feet in the great wave of sympathy and admiration that went out to him. The very character of the tragedy itself threw a calcium light blaze upon those qualities of virile Americanism and lion-hearted courage with which throughout all the United States he has so long been identified in the public mind, and for which the American people have been drawn to him in an enthusiasm of hero worship hardly matched in our political history. Not a person in that audience who did not know that if Quentin Roosevelt must die there was no way in which his father would rather have him die than the way he did die—his fighting face turned to the last towards the enemy; laying down his young life in defense of his country's honor; not a person who did not know that however bitter Mr. Roosevelt's grief might be, it found consolation in the noble death of the son who was so dear to him. And knowing all this, as those in that convention did know it, as the people of the whole country knew it, Mr. Roosevelt at that moment stood at the supreme dramatic climax of his astoundingly spectacular career. All the prejudices, all the antagonisms, all the bitter enmities which he had left in such profusion in the wake of his masterful, aggressive political life vanished as by magic in the sweep of that moment's overpowering emotion.

And it was all an accident; a series of accidents. The convention itself, which was not a convention, was an accident, the curious product of counter-currents and internal contentions. And the gallant death of as gallant a young soldier as ever wore the American uniform, that sad occurrence, too, coming as it did at precisely the psychological moment to make Mr. Roosevelt's grip on the hearts of his countrymen stronger than ever before—that, also, was an accident.

In this instance as in the tragedy at Buffalo, as in the attempt to assassinate Mr. Roosevelt himself at a critical moment in one of his political campaigns, the overwhelming drama of some tragic event has ever appeared as by the decree of destiny itself, to come at just the moment to lift him up as Fortune's own child and to rivet his hold on the hearts of Americans everywhere.

Barring death, or disability, what is there and who is there to block his way to any honor and high responsibility within the gift of the American people? And to whom else, in this hour in our history calling for all that is most courageous and inflexibly unwavering in purpose, are the eyes of the American people turning as their logical, inevitable leader as they are turning at this moment towards Theodore Roosevelt? We do not say this is as it should be. We do not comment upon it either one way or the other. We simply record a fact—one more of the many amazing facts in this extraordinary man's public career. Beloved by his party; hated by his party. His party's idol; his party's anathema. One wing of his party adoring him, and another wing sworn to have his political life. The wrecker of his party and now, forsooth, the one man apparently on whom the reuniting of his party and the breathing into it of a new vitality and a new career of victory seems to depend! Surely nothing in all the intricate complexities of political adventure in the United States has anything to match so paradoxical a career as this.—North American Review's War Weekly.

Before Getting to Work.

Pat had been very much impressed by a sermon he had heard on "The Day of Judgment," although he did not understand its full significance. So he sought an interview with the priest.

"Do you mean, Father," he asked, "that everybody will be there on the Day of Judgment?"

"Yes, Pat, everybody."

"Do you mean that all my neighbors and the Knights of Columbus and the editors of the Menace will all be there?"

"Yes, Pat, everybody."

"Well, all oi've got to say is this: there'll be very, very little judgin' on that first day!—Harper's Monthly Magazine.
