Pershing Praises Doughboys.
"The American doughboy is the finest soldier in the world," declared General John J. Pershing at a reception to newspaper men in New York.

The statement was made in the course of an interview in which he compared the tumultuous reception he received on arriving home with his unannounced departure for Europe in May, 1917.

"It was very foggy when we sailed out of the harbor two years ago," said the general. "There were no bands playing, no whistles blowing, and no ships dressed. The contrast between my departure and my return is like the darkest midnight and a beautiful noonday. Nothing could equal the impression made on me of my homecoming."

"It is too warm an afternoon to discuss the Mexican situation," was the general's answer to another question. "I don't know anything about the Mexican situation. You see I have just returned from a situation over there."

General Pershing said that he had not the time to go into a general discussion of European affairs, and that his work "was purely on the military side."

"What do you think of the American doughboy?" he was asked.

"He is the finest soldier in the world," was the reply. "It didn't take Europe long to find it out. We used to boast about the peculiar qualities of the American soldier, but judging by what he did, his eagerness, aggressiveness, devotion to duty, and the efficiency he displayed as a member of the A. E. F., we had every right to be proud of him. That is all there is to it."

"What makes the American the best soldier?"

"It is because of the way American boys are brought up; because they are encouraged to take the initiative and to be the master of their own destiny."

"Is there any one incident which stands out as the climax of the work of the A. E. F., or your own experience?" General Pershing was asked.

"The breaking through of the lines at Sedan," was the answer. "That was on November 6. The crumbling of the Hindenburg line was but a step toward the climax at Sedan."

"Could the German lines have held had it not been for the revolution in Germany?" asked a questioner.

"The German armies were beaten," said the general.

General Pershing said that it was he who had said the word which gave Marshal Foch command of the American armies. He said that the word "was not given by letter, but in a verbal offer, which was inspired by military agencies."

"What is your opinion of Marshal Foch?"

After a moment's hesitation, he replied: "Marshal Foch is a very great strategist. I think that covers it."

The Depreciated Dollar.
According to Congressman Martin B. Madden, of Illinois, the purchasing power of the dollar today is about forty-eight cents. That has been brought about, he says, by the expansion of the currency to the extent of $13,000,000,000. He claims that not ninety percent of those who bought government bonds had the money to pay for them. The result was that they had to get loans from the banks. The banks did not have the money, and they had to take the bonds and their own notes to the Federal Reserve banks for discount. The Federal Reserve banks did not have the money and they had to issue federal reserve currency—$13,000,000,000 worth.

A Soft Snap.
Wanted—Manager who can write forcible advertising copy for a popular priced department store, who can also trim neat, stocky windows and can write cards. Preference will be given to man who can take charge and sell in a cloak and suit department in spare time.—Grand Leader, Jackson, Mich.

To this might have been added: Attend the furnace, try on shoes, keep the books, drive the delivery wagon, collect the bills and candle the eggs. Even then the fellow would have a sinecure.
