DIPLOMACY WINS

By REBECCA T. FARNHAM.

(© 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Detective Joe Mitchell of Spoffordville presented a figure of utter dejection, as he jogged along the country road in his little buggy. Had anyone chanced to see him, he would have guessed that Joe was on his way to his only source of consolation—Martha Jackson. And rightly, for the buggy rolled past the neat farm houses, and began to climb a hill road, which led to but one place—Martha's home.

Martha, tall and spare, with shiny black hair, and eyes that never seemed to smile, had lived alone, remote from the life of Spoffordville for many years, working the little farm herself, and having only the bare necessities of life. She rarely came to the village, but she had managed to attract in these few trips the detective, Joe Mitchell. Three years ago he had begun to direct his mare's steps toward the farm on the hill, and now the way was well-known to both horse and master.

"I've got bad news, Martha," said Joe, as he sat down in the shabby rocker in the equally shabby "front room."

"Bad news?"

"Mr. Pennington tells me that he'll give me just two more days on this case. If I can't find the goblet in that time, he'll call a detective from the city."

Martha's eyes clouded as she heard his disappointed tone. "They're making a lot of fuss over a little silver cup," she said, scornfully.

"It's an heirloom, that's why. Alice Pennington had it for a wedding present, but it's been in the family for years. Now they're offering all this money to get it back again."

"And you won't get the money?"

The voice had such despair in it that Joe hastened to go on.

"I don't mind that so much, although I was counting on it. It's my reputation that I care about. If the city detective finds it when I can't, what'll I be good for afterwards?"

The buggy rattled down the hill, and Martha turned back into the house. "It was just for bad news that he came," she sighed, "and I hoped that it would be—for something else."

The wedding of Alice Pennington, the daughter of the only wealthy man that Spoffordville owned, had produced a great sensation in the town. Mr. Pennington, out of public spiritedness, had invited all the townspeople to his daughter's wedding, and so eagerly was the invitation accepted, that practically everyone appeared, including the recluse, Martha.

When the silver heirloom was found to be missing from the display of wedding gifts, the local detective was hired to solve the mystery.

The next morning a youth of about thirteen years entered the detective's office.

"Hello, Joe," said the intruder, intimately.

"Hello, Bill," replied the detective to William C. Ramson, Jr.

"I've got news for you," said William. "I know where the goblet is."

"Where?" cried Mitchell, leaping to his feet.

William was cautious. "You know I expect part of the—er—"

"Of course! But quick! Tell me where it is."

"Hitch up and I'll show you," agreed the boy.

Ten minutes later Bill Ramson, with the detective at his side, was guiding the horse along a familiar road.

"Here we are," he said, triumphantly.

Joe looked quickly around him. "What! You don't mean—She ain't—"

Bill nodded. "Yes, she has. Last night I was up here, and happened to peep in the window, and she was holding that little cup."

Joe was silent; then he made a snatch for the reins. "Give me them," he cried. "We'll turn out of here in double quick time. Do you think I'd accuse her?"

"All right," said Bill, cheerfully. "Don't then. But I will," and he began to get out of the buggy.

"No, you don't," Joe yanked him back again. An idea had come suddenly to him. "You keep quiet about this, youngster," he said, "that's part of your agreement, understand? Now you get out of sight. I'll go in."

Inside the house with Martha, Joe found his plan very hard to carry out. "Martha," he said suddenly, "will you marry me?"

The question was put none too abruptly. The tired eyes took on another light, and gave him her answer. But Joe had still more to do, although the hardest was over.

"Martha," he said, after a few minutes. "I want to confess something before we go any further. I think the time for me to say it is now. I—I got foolish drunk on hard cider up to Jim Sister's place one time."

There was a deep silence, and Joe waited breathlessly.

"Joe," finally came, the answer. "I've got something to confess, too. I took that cup at the wedding. It was so pretty, and I'd never had anything nice. I just picked it up and—I took it home here, and then you were the detective, and I didn't know what to do. But take it. Here it is."

Spoffordville had much to talk about the next few days. The cup had been found, though no one seemed to know exactly where; there was another wedding, also, one to which everyone had long been looking forward; and best of all, in the eyes of the younger set, was that handsome new bicycle, owned exclusively by William C. Ramson, Jr.

Brought Up That Way.

A woman recently engaged a new maid with whose appearance and manner she was greatly pleased. When the terms had been agreed upon, the lady of the house said, "Now, my last maid was much too friendly with the policeman. I hope I can trust you."

"Indeed you can, ma'am," replied the new maid. "I can't bear policemen. I was brought up to hate the very sight of them. You see, my father was a burglar."
