Fully a hundred people from Princeton enjoyed a day at Sandy lake yesterday. Sandy is certainly a beautiful lake, fed entirely by springs.

Mrs. James Phalen, aged 21 years, died at Mille Lacs lake on July 11. She was the bride of only a year and was living with her husband on his claim. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Lowell of Spencer Brook. Her death has saddened the hearts of many dear friends.

Miss Gibbons of the state auditor's office, St. Paul, has been spending her vacation in Princeton.

The village is well filled with fly. chahming schoolma'ams and the boys are parading in their Sunday-go-tomeeting clothes.

The daily papers report ravages of rust in this section but farmers say they have found but very little. The highbrows of the dailies, who roost in garrets and couldn't tell the difference between rust and barnyard street, the boy in the hammock sat manure, always know more than the Right Kind of Appraisal.

Appreciation of the value and importance of permanent good roads is such in Rice county that the people to shut her ears to the music, and the of Fairbault, Northfield and Dundas will take occasion to celebrate the completion of the Jefferson highway which connects the three towns. That event will occur on July 21, when the appreciative citizens will meet at a point on the new road in the county center and make glad accordingly. The Jefferson highway connects St. Paul with the Iowa road system and runs north to Winnipeg. In many respects it is the chief of the new highways and in both of its sections will sustain heavy and continuous traffic. The point of interest in this connection is the public recognition of good road values. Rice county people always have been progressive and have not been lacking in roadways considered serviceable at the time; but they know and appreciate the real thing and tell the state so when they get together to jubilate over the completion of this concrete stretch. In the years marching lines of khaki. On and on of the near future these road completion jubilations will be frequent over across the moving pageant. He was the state and custom will not stale standing alone at the edge of the their interest.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Mrs. Kent worked quietly about the house for some time. Derry usually slept most of the forenoon. She tried knowledge that out there, khaki-clad lads, strong, intelligent, were paying honor to those who slept.

The boom of the saluting guns smote upon her ears. She went to the door and peeped at the hammock. It was about the yard and saw the open gate. In 10 months Derry had never been out there alone. She ran down the street trying to steady her trembling knees. With sure instinct she made for the cemetery. He had gone to the parade.

She sped on. The procession was winding slowly out, drums muted, music stilled. The sun caught in the folds of the silken flag at the head of the column, and the breeze flung it forth, red as the sacrificial blood of its slain, white as the souls of its heroic womanhood, blue as the heavens that had guarded and moulded it. But she had eyes for none of these. Only dimly did she see the thin line of blue, the whiteclad girls, the sturdy they passed, and at last she saw him crowd, the dazed wondering frown
