"Yes," said the rural jailer. "When he borrowed my keys and told me somebody wanted to see me in the alley on important business, I knew he was up to something.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Nannie's Bashful Beau

By DOROTHY WHITCOMB Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union.

Lucius Borden was the most modest and bashful young man in Creston. He had only one confidant in the world—his old Aunt Phoebe.

"Aunt Phoebe," announced Lucius "I have caught it." "Caught what?" she inquired with interest.

"The fever—the fever—" "Blessed boy!" cried Aunt Phoebe in a startled way—"send at once for the doctor."

"Oh, I don't mean that kind," disclaimed Lucius confusedly. "It's the fever—the fever of love I'm talking about."

Thereupon Lucius began to blush furiously. Purposely Aunt Phoebe evaded starting him into still deeper embarrassment. She simply said:

"Well, nephew, if the object of your esteem is worthy I am very glad of it." "You are?" exclaimed Lucius, greatly encouraged. "You know the Wilsons."

"Very well, indeed, and they are a fine family." "With two daughters," proceeded Lucius quite animatedly—"Bertha and Nannie. It's Nannie."

"Oh, it is? She's a bright sweet girl, and would make any home happy?" "Thank you, said Lucius gratefully. I'm going down to propose for her hand tonight."

More than once he opened a small case and glanced at a neat little ring inside of it. "Lucius to Nannie" was the inscription it bore.

Now Lucius had done no distinct courting. He had known the Wilsons for many years.

When Lucius reached the Wilson home that evening all in a bewildering flutter he found Bertha in the garden. She invited him to a rustic seat, kind and pleasant with him as she was always.

"I'd like to ask a question, Miss Wilson," spoke Lucius abruptly. "Certainly Mr. Borden," she replied. "You are so kind and good to me. I've got a ring here," and Lucius brought to light the little case.

"It's an engagement ring that I may want to use later in the evening. Will you just tell me what finger of the lady I put it on?"

"Why this one," explained Bertha, rather seriously too, and she held out her hand and Lucius slipped the circlet in place, took it off again and said gleefully:

"Did I do it right?" "Oh, perfectly," assured Bertha, and she looked a trifle troubled.

"Then—could I see your mother, Mrs. Wilson, for a few minutes?" "Just go into the parlor, Mr. Borden," directed, Bertha, "and I will find her."

"I've come—you see, well, I want to ask you for the hand of your daughter, Mrs. Wilson," blurted out Lucius as the matron entered the room.

"Mrs. Borden," spoke the lady, "I am very sorry, but my daughter has been secretly engaged to a young man, now abroad, for over a year."

"Oh, my!" gasped poor Lucius. "We are your friends, your true friends," went on the kind-hearted lady and we will always be your friends."

How Lucius got out of the house he did not know. He saw his fabric of loving dreams and ardent hopes all in ruins. Just crossing the garden he came upon Nannie.

She deliberately turned her back upon him and saluted away. "Lucius was crushed. He stole home wretched."

It was at a town picnic that he next came directly in contact with any of the family. He was staring dazedly at the river when a light form flashed before him.

"I have found you, I am glad," spoke Bertha Wilson. "Mr. Borden, do you realize how mother and I are worrying about you? This is all wrong. We think everything of you and—"

"Don't speak of it. I know it," said Lucius in a distressful tone. "That don't mend it, though. Here, keep that as a memento and forget a poor miserable duffer who thought he had a right to live—and love."

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, the death angel has again visited our ranks and has taken from us our beloved and highly esteemed brother, Gustav H. Gottwerth, whose eventful life among us has found its culmination and entered the promised life beyond. He was ever true and faithful to the principles of Oddfellowship, and while we are bereft, we shall not forget him. As a lodge, therefore, be it

Resolved, that in the death of Brother Gottwerth this lodge has lost a worthy member who at all times believed and practiced the principles of Friendship, Love and Truth, and be it

Resolved, that this lodge tender the bereaved family its sincere sympathy and consolation in this hour of sorrow, and be it further

Resolved, that these resolutions be recorded upon the minutes of Princeton lodge No. 208, I. O. O. F., of Minnesota, and a copy be presented to the family, and a copy thereof be published in the Princeton Union.

Stories of Great Scouts

TOM HIGGINS' GREATEST FIGHT WITH THE INDIANS

Tom Higgins was a noted Illinois ranger during the War of 1812. One morning near Fort Hills the Indians ambushed Tom's company and killed several of them. As they fled to the fort, Higgins stayed behind, vowing that he would get at least one Indian before he retreated.

He got his Indian, but just as he was preparing to mount his horse, Ranger Burgess, who was lying on the ground wounded, called out to him: "You won't leave me to the Indians, will you, Tom?"

Higgins stopped and attempted to lift Burgess onto his horse, but the frightened animal jerked the reins from Tom's hand and dashed madly away.

"You'll have to try to crawl to the fort, Burgess," said Tom, "and I will stay behind and keep redskins off."

As Burgess crawled away, Higgins ran in another direction to lead the approaching Indians away from his wounded comrade. In a few minutes he was surrounded by the savages and they wounded him in the leg as he fled into a deep ravine.

He was near the fort when three Indians rose up before him. One of them fired and the ranger fell, wounded for the second time.

With a wild yell the Indians rushed at him with uplifted tomahawks, but Higgins rose once more and shot one of them dead. The other two then attacked him with spears and tomahawks. Tom defended himself with his knife until he was knocked to the ground by a blow from a tomahawk which cut off one of his ears.

Finally the ranger tore a spear from the grasp of one of the Indians and thrust it through the body of the other. He was pulled to his feet as the savage fell. The surviving warrior retreated toward his rifle and Tom, undaunted by his wounds, staggered after him.

The unequal combat had been seen by the people in the fort, but they were afraid to come to his assistance until a brave woman, named Mrs. Pursey, cried out: "I will not see such a brave man die!"

She sprang upon a horse and started to Higgins' aid. Shamed by her example, several men galloped after her. They reached the ranger just as a large party of Indians were ready to swoop down upon him. They threw Higgins, fainting from loss of blood, across a horse and carried him back to the fort in safety.

Higgins did not recover from his wounds for many years, but in his old age he was given a pension for his heroic act and was made a doorkeeper in the state assembly at Vandalla.
