THE FOREIGN WHEAT MARKET.

Free-trade attorneys, British and American, persistently seek the support of farmers by holding out the promise of enlarged foreign markets for the products of the farm as the result of engrafting the Cobden policy into our National legislation.

The hollowness of such promise becomes apparent when it is remembered that not only the quantity of farm products which foreigners will consume is limited, but that the privilege of supplying this is contested by other farmers Webb will also make his home in the who are in position to crowd prices be- upper part of the same dwelling. low the cost of production in this country.
