

THE NEW WOMAN VERY OLD.

Mrs. Mary Astell Flourished in 1709.

When our new woman is not proposing to herself and her readers a reversion to the ancient system of polyandry (on which consult McLennan, Westernmark, Morgan and Bachofen) she is apt to disdain and shrink from the atrocious and oppressive male sex, says the North American Review. She is not so new but that Mrs. Mary Astell was before her, in 1709. Mrs. Mary "proposed a sort of female college, in which ladies nauseating the parade of the world might find a happy retirement." Queen Anne meant to endow this establishment, but Bishop Burnet persuaded her that it savored of popery. Sir Walter Scott (who had nothing new in him) speaks of Mrs. Mary as a Precieuse, who is anxious to confound the boundaries which nature has fixed for the employments and studies of the two sexes. Swift laughed at Mrs. Mary in The Tatler (No. 32). But the new woman who spins the degrading coarseness of matrimony has closer patterns of Moliere's Cathos and Madelon ("Les Precieuses Ridicules," 1659). These ladies express themselves with such virtuous freedom, that I could not quote them unless I were a Keyhole Series. The student is, therefore, blushing to refer to the original drama by the unprincipled Poquelin. For Moliere, too, had nothing new about him; he laughed at these original delicacies of sentiment. The new young lady in society is remarked for the generous breadth of her language and the large frolic of her wit. But, alas! even this is not so very new. In the correspondence of Lady Suffolk (1714-1760) we find the maids of honor, led by the oldest and most prudish, Miss Meadows, larking about on a winter night, outside Kensington palace, knocking on the panes and throwing open the windows in the modern taste. I read in a periodical devoted to the intellectual needs of women. The Lady's Realm, that the most popular and most justly popular lady in England excels in the confecting of "apple-pie beds." I don't believe it, of course, but this news is of the kind that women love.

JULES VERNE.

Very Different from the Man One's Imagination Would Picture.

If, meeting him without knowing who he was, I had been asked to divine his profession, I would have said he was a retired army general or a professor of physics and mathematics or a cabinet officer—never an artist, says a writer in the Chautauquan, in speaking of Jules Verne. He does not show the burden of his almost 80 years, he has somewhat of Verdi's build, with a serious, kindly face, no artist-like vivacity in look or word, very simple manners, the imprint of great sincerity in every feasting manifestation of feeling and thought, the language, the bearing, the manner of dress of a man who considers appearances of absolutely no account. My first sensation after the pleasure of seeing him was one of stupefaction. Apart from the friendly look and the affable demeanor I could recognize nothing in common with the Verne who stood before me and the one that had a place in my imagination. My wonder even increased when, induced to speak about his works, he spoke of them with an abstracted air, as he would have done of some one else's writings, or rather of things in which entered no merit of his—as he would have spoken of a collection of engravings or coins he had acquired and with which he occupied himself from the necessity of doing something rather than from any passion for the art.

The Willy Raven.

The following anecdote, communicated by Mr. R. Ball to the author of Thomson's Irish Birds, is a curious illustration of the remarkable sagacity of the raven. A tame raven, kept by schoolboys, was very attentive in watching their crib or bird traps, and when a bird was taken, the raven endeavored to catch it by turning back top of the trap with its beak, but in so doing the bird always escaped, as the raven could not let go the crib in time to seize. After several vain attempts of this kind the raven, seeing another bird caught, instead of going at once to the trap, went to another tame raven and induced it to accompany him. When the second raven lifted up the crib, the other bore the poor captive off in triumph.

Feeds Newspapers to His Hens.

A farmer of Clare County, Michigan, has found that he can increase the egg-laying abilities of his hens by feeding to them old newspapers torn in bits and soaked in sour milk until the whole becomes a pulp. The hens, it is said, like the new food, and the inventor expects to see almost any day one of the freak papers come out with the picture of a hen that sets type.

Origin of Horseshoeing.

In the ninth century they began to shoe horses, but, strange to say, only in time of frost. King William I. introduced horseshoeing into England, and six horseshoes are on the coat of arms of the man to whom William gave vast estates for caring for his horses in this way.

New Weather Prophets.

A new point in weather wisdom comes from Rhode Island. An observer says the rabbits are barking the trees some distance above the ground with their hind legs, and that this means a coming deep fall of snow, during which the rabbits will be seen bearing to return to their hiding places.

Man's Longest Night.

During Dr. Nansen's Arctic journey his ship, the Fram, remained for five and a half months, from October 8, 1895, until March 24, 1896, out of sight of the sun. "This," Dr. H. R. Mill, the English geographer, remarks, "was the longest and darkest night ever experienced by man."

FENCING IS THE FAD.

New York Women Going In for It in Earnest.

Prepare! Salute! On guard! Defend! Clash! Clash! These are sounds that may be heard in many New York homes nowadays, says the New York Herald. Fencing at home has become a fad, and rooms especially devoted to the exercise with the foil are found in the residences of all the young women who have bowed fealty to Dame Fashion. There are few exercises which more thoroughly develop the muscles of the body than fencing. In Germany, where the women fence as much as they ride bicycles over here, feminine strength and health and grace are generally enjoyed, although with us they are not to be found as often as is desired. This is an era of the practical in society and it is likely in this fact will be found the reason for the general spread of this new fad. Instead of arraying herself in fine clothes and undergoing for two hours a sort of social martyrdom under the guise of an afternoon tea the girl of the period receives a half dozen of her friends in her fencing room and there many a pleasant half hour is spent in discussing and demonstrating the latest forms of fence, guard, parry and attack. One has to see the society woman handle the foils to appreciate the change which a few months' or even a few weeks' work in fencing can accomplish. The costumes worn by ladies when fencing are much more attractive than the ordinary bicycle suits now so common upon the streets, and there is practically no limit to the fanciful decorations which can be indulged in in the fitting up of these private fencing rooms. Many of them are fitted up in the style of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. Some of the enthusiasts are not content with a simple fencing room, but have in addition a small room adjoining fitted with everything essential to feminine comfort after the exertion of a half hour's active work with the foils. Here the hostess and her fencing friends may chat among themselves to their hearts' content without the presence of men, who must be talked to and kept in good humor. Men are not wanted there. Fencing puts muscles of steel into the daintiest and slenderest of wrists and whiteness of hands, trains the eye and gives a physical dexterity far beyond what one would imagine until seen in actual practice. Whatever may be said of fads in general, the present one has the effect of giving healthful amusement to a class of women who otherwise would never take needed exercise. The favorite system of fencing now practiced by the society woman is of the French school, which, as is well known, was founded on the sword play of Spain, and which was introduced into France and later into Italy by Spanish boursbons. While the Italian masters have kept to this day the long foil, with its bell-shaped guard, the direct descendant of the old Spanish rapier, the French have modernized the weapon and the fencing foil of to-day is the result.

The Color of Wild Animals.

It is a remarkable fact that many birds and wild animals are white on the under parts of their bodies, and Mr. Thayer, an American naturalist, seems to have found the reason for the peculiarity. He has illustrated his views by an interesting experiment. Taking three large potatoes, he paints one-half of each of them a grass green color. The halves of the other two are painted white, but the third potato is left unpainted on one half, or else is painted all green. He then places the three potatoes on the grass in a row, their green sides uppermost. On retiring to a certain distance, the two potatoes which are white underneath become invisible, whereas the potato which is all green or else unpainted on its lower part is easily seen. His explanation of the mystery is that the white coloration relieves the deep shadow cast by the upper part of the potato. Hence he believes that white on the under side of animals is a protective ordinance, to keep them from being discerned at a distance by their shadows. The coloration of their upper parts is usually in harmony with the background of their habitat, and easily confounded with it by an eye at a distance, but their black shadow would betray them were it not relieved by the white of their undersides. The ptarmigan is all white in winter to match the snow, and, therefore, it cannot have a lighter coloration on its under parts, but the reflection from the snow relieves the depth of its shadow.

Costly Bottle of Champagne.

Some years ago Mr. Gladstone had met a possible claimant for a civil list pension who he believed to be in sufficiently poor circumstances and had almost decided to grant it, when he received an invitation to dinner with the person in question. This raised some doubt in his mind. On the one hand, should a civil-list pensioner be able to entertain a guest? On the other, it might be only a dinner of herbs, and it seemed hard to deprive a public benefactor of a pension because he was ready to share his crust and water with the poor. In any case there would be a feast of reason and a flow of soul, Mr. Gladstone accepted the invitation, and on the way propounded to his companion the following test: "No champagne pension; champagne, no pension." There was champagne, and the host lost his pension. It was the dearest bottle of wine on record, for it cost the purchaser £100 a year.—London News.
