A GOOD INVENTION.

Among all the improvements in modern among all the improvements in modern mechanism, says the Chicago Tribune, the art of horaeshoeing has met with little ad-vancement. The fold fashioned way of nailing the shoe to the hoof, with all its attendant evils, remains in vogue. We have just been shown a horseshoe, invented by Thomas Skelton, of Rockford, Ill., which will be very likely to work a complete revolution in the practice of horse-shoeing. The shoe consists of a hinged plate, with four or five little flanges or proplate, with four or live little flanges or projections extending upon on the outside of the horses hoof, clasping it like so many little fingers, making a neat and perfectly effective attachment to the hoof. On the bottom of this hinged plate the sole of the shoe, se to speak, or the part that comes in contact with the ground, is fastened by strong set sorews, whereby the flanged strong set screws, whereby the flanged plate is held firmly to the foot, the whole making a handsome, easy and durable shoe which can be easily put on and taken off, and, instead of endangering the hoof, after the manuer of the old fashioned shoe, is an absolute preserver of the hoof, adapted to those that are split, tender or thin, as wel as all others.

The shoe is made of malleable iron,

The body of a man was found in the river yesterday, about two miles below the city, under circumstances which lead to belie that he was murdered. His feet was first discovered, and an effort being made to life the body, it was found that his head was held down by a rope to which was attached a heavy weight. The body was so much decomposed that it was imposssible to determine whether there were any marks of violence upon it. The deceased was about five and a half feet in height, and had gray whiskers. A coroner's jury was summoned and a verdict rendered in accordance with these facts. The body had probably been in the water several weeks .- Pioneer 25th
