

BY HORACE.

O thou descendant of father's most noble, Thou lord of the whisker, the smirk and the hobble,
There is a man who places his pride,
In horses, race courses, and jockies to ride,
When the winning race, and receiving the prize,
Would exult to a deity in his own eyes.
Old Deaf is well pleased if he's taken in store,
And gets eight for hind quarters, six for the fore,
And Ben when he buys in a cheap corner lot,
In ecstasy cries, what a bargain I've got!
And our friend Abby has placed his delight,
In the bottle by day and the bottle by night,
And thinks it no folly to spend all his money,
In buying punch brandy well sweetened with honey,
To out drink and to lay all his friends on the shelf, Thus making them fools, and an ass of himself,
Full many there are who are fond of the camp,
The whoop of the savage, the sentinel's tramp, Brave General's all, whose renown near and far,
Is spread in reports of the Florida war,
But thou, pride of the people and lord of the leg,
Whose greatest admirers have named thee the peg, Thy love for the people, so warm and so true,
Would cause you to serve any way you are able,
And think you are doing no more than is due,
By working in Senate, post office or stable,
In peace, on the stump, in the field when there's war,
Or when clients are wronged, you are found at the bar,

Expounding the laws you have made to the jury,
And explaining those wrongs with most eloquent fury.
Philanthropy warm in thy pure bosom dwells,
With kindly emotions of love thy heart swells,
For men of all nations, or white, black or blue, Whether Dutchman or Irishman, Robin or Sue; Hugging some of your arms, with your legs hugging others.
But treating them all as a parcel of brothers,
And yet lovely man—it has been thy hard lot,
To be kicked from thy station by Jackson and Scott!
Yes, fortune is fickle, her smile is a ray Escaped from the sun on a bleak winter day,
A meteor blazing along the blue sky,
But beaming a moment to fade and to die,
So pine not at this, for the future is thine,
The wreath of the poet around thee shall twine, Thou, then in his verse, in thy deeds shall live And each one to each perpetuity give.
GLASGOW, July 12th, 1842.

I WOULD respectfully intimate to all those in residing in the city of New York, that their notes and other legal obligations are in my possession, and have been assigned to me, also a power of Attorney has been executed for the purpose of enabling me to collect and discharge the same, and as I am desirous of affording every inducement as far as is compatible with the interests of the creditors, already forwarded, taking into consideration the unprecedented pressure presently existing in the money market, I propose to take in liquidation for any debt due the above firm if paid previous to the 1st of November 1842, the following description of bank paper and others that are generally con-

Therefore, after this limited period expires, suits will be instituted against those who have neglected to regard this generous offer and omitted to settle their liabilities.

practicable, to each individual, informing him of the amount of his indebtedness, including interest to the present time, consequently, they who wish to avail themselves of the propositions already named, will find it to their advantage to apply to me immediately.

thought which throws a shadow over my feelings, that is, where are many with whom I have associated an academic course of three years? My memory is faithful in bringing them up before my mind. I could call their names and speak of the joys, sports and pleasures I have had with them; but the question again returns, where are they to-day?
I have contended for scholastic honors for whom I formed by long association the strongest attachment! Am I left to tell that there was such a class?
Some are vending their course through circuitous journey of life; some have the train in the circle of fashion, and now figuring upon the fashionable some have taken the more dignified train of a married life; others have passed into another world. But we here to speak of their absence, we memorate their names, and embalm in the sacred repository of memory.
We propose giving the history of a school girl's life, and offering some reflections to induce you to persevere in the acquisition of knowledge.
